Mr. Davies: The hon. Gentleman understands neither his brief nor the biology of the fox. Hunts go out during the very season when the vixen are whelped. They hunt in February, when the vixen has her cubs underground. The consequences are twofold: either the hunt will kill a vixen, leaving the cubs to die underground, or the hunt will kill a dog fox if it is above ground and he will be unable to provide for the vixen. The hon. Gentleman must understand that the current practice of hunting in February and March results in that happening.

It has been asserted that hunting controls the fox population. All the scientific evidence available from universities, academic studies, field research and the examination of other predators that are top of their food chain shows beyond doubt that the factors that control the fox population are not predation from above but the ability of the habitat to sustain that population. It depends on whether there is sufficient habitat for individual animals to control and defend an adequate food supply to sustain them. If one tries to control the total fox population by culling, whether by hunting, snaring or shooting, one simply encourages foxes to breed more rapidly. Instead of our having a smaller fox population, we will simply have a younger one, because the young vixens will breed more. We should encourage research being done at the universities of Aberdeen, Oxford and Bristol to determine the impact of the culling of foxes. I think that if it were not done, there would be fewer foxes. There would be an older fox population, and fewer vixens would breed. The hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) is laughing, but if he spoke to the farmers in his constituency, he would know that that is the case. Older vixens would breed less; they would have fewer litters. The population would come into equilibrium with the habitat. All the scientific evidence demonstrates that.

The Bill establishes that individuals cannot be cruel to wild animals—a principle which no one can dispute. If it applies to captive and domestic animals, surely it must apply to wild animals. The hunting lobby opposes that principle. We should support the Bill, in defiance of the hunting lobby, for three reasons. The first is that the act of hunting is cruel and unnecessary. Secondly, if we accept the Bill we shall start a new chapter; we shall start to rewrite our relationship with animals, saying that although we use them, we must do so with respect.

The third reason is that this country has no international moral authority when it negotiates on matters of animal welfare. That is why the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food could not get his way in Iceland when he opposed the culling of whales. The Icelanders said, "Do not tell us how to cull whales humanely. At least we eat the whales that we kill. You practise fox hunting for fun."

In the Council of Ministers, we cannot oppose the French practice of culling birds, or the Spaniards' of bull fighting and the other blood festivals. We must accept that there is now a European and international dimension. If we want to hold our heads up high in the councils of the world we must put our own house in order.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Have you received any requests for a statement on today's sharp fall in the inflation figure? The Secretary of State for Employment should be brought to the House——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I have received no such request.

1.17 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mrs. Angela Rumbold): I begin by offering my congatulations to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on his good fortune in securing the debate today. We have had the opportunity for a full day's debate on an important matter, and we have debated it with passion, but also with good humour. The matter was last debated and voted on in 1949—that may be something of a record.

The Bill's title describes it as a measure to provide protection for wild mammals. The Government have already given considerable priority to that aspect of the law, and I hope that the House will bear with me if I give a few details of what we have achieved. I hope that hon. Members will agree that it amounts to an impressive list of useful and effective measures.

We have put the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 on to the statute book. It established for the first time in this country a comprehensive framework protecting species and their habitats. I shall give the House three examples of the substantial advances that the Act has brought about.

First, it protects 116 species of animals, including all our endangered mammals. Creatures such as the red squirrel, the otter and 15 species of bats found in Great Britain are now protected against killing, injuring and disturbance. We keep the list of species under regular review with our scientific advisers, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee.

Secondly, the Act banned the use of the self-locking snare on any wild animal and protected a number of particular species, such as the badger and the red squirrel, from trapping and snaring in general. The United Kingdom is also acting against cruel trapping methods abroad. We were in the forefront in pressing for the EC regulation on the importation of certain furs. That regulation was adopted last November and will prohibit the use of the leg-hold trap, which has already been banned in this country for more than 30 years.

Thirdly, the 1981 Act gives special protection to birds. The Act made it an offence to kill or take wild birds, damage their nests or take or destroy their eggs. The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 was also tightened up last year by making it an offence to cause or permit another person to contravene those provisions of the Act which prohibit the use of cruel or indiscriminate methods of killing or taking wild birds or protected species. This will help to bring home to people who use or permit the use of illegal methods to kill wildlife that we are determined to do everything possible to meet our objectives for the protection of our natural heritage, and especially our endangered species.

Clearly, the provision of protection for animals which are pests in the countryside motivates the Bill. However, pests are already subject to the law. It is a testimony to the British concern for animals that our pests, as well as our pets, are covered by the law. I should say to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Dame J. Fookes) that some areas are probably not yet protected.

Quite apart from the Wildlife and Countryside Act, there is legislation governing the use of chemical products and spring traps to control pests. Before they can be approved for sale, products classified as pesticides undergo a thorough evaluation. This includes an assessment of whether the product is humane in its action. Similar criteria apply to the testing of spring traps, which must be approved by order in the House.

I am a little disappointed by the Bill's provisions. The Bill is very wide ranging, in that it seeks to provide protection for any wild mammal and to protect them from a number of activities. It is obvious that the Bill is designed to provide the greatest possible protection to the greatest number of wild mammals. However, the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North, especially at the start of his speech, made no secret of the fact that one of the principal aims of the Bill is the prevention of fox hunting and other field sports. As the hon. Gentleman knows, that central tenet is bound to be contradicted by those who see field sports as a proper and necessary part of maintaining the balance of nature. We have heard many such arguments in the debate. Nevertheless, this is the issue of principle at the heart of the debate.

My personal view is that a simple Bill that tackled the issue of field sports on its own would have been a better way of achieving the purpose. We could then have had a debate that concentrated entirely on the issue of principle. As it is, the other provisions in the Bill will complicate today's debate and the consideration of the field sports question. It is, after all, the issue of principle which really interests the public.

All hon. Members who have spoken and many others have reported full postbags on the central issue. The Bill's supporters claim that a substantial majority of the public are in favour of banning fox hunting. My straw poll on Wednesday among my Home Office colleagues, who represent a fairly good cross-section of constituencies, suggested that the division is nearer half and half. I share hon. Members' scepticism about the results of ordinary and straw polls.

Mr. Colvin: My right hon. Friend speaks about the results of straw polls, which were mentioned by some hon. Members. A recent straw poll in the New Forest showed that a majority of people were in favour of a ban on hunting. On that result, the local Liberal Democrat council decided to pass a resolution calling on me to support such a ban. However, that straw poll was not consistent with a previous one which showed that 97 per cent. of New Forest people were in favour of hunting. Those who carry out straw polls probably get the results that they seek.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am not sure whether I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that, as I carried out a straw poll among my Home Office colleagues.

I must tell the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North that the Government have considerable reservations about the effect of the Bill both on farmers and on rural communities as a whole. The Bill would impose onerous obligations on everyone in rural communities, making it extremely difficult to control agricultural pests effectively. The licensing system in the Bill is the problem. I was glad to note that, when the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North introdued the Bill he pointed to the possibility of reconsidering those provisions.

I will explain our fears about what would happen in practice once a farmer had applied for a licence and it may become clear to the House why we have such concerns. The Bill provides only for the issue of licences to prevent serious damage, but licensing should be limited in application. Each application received would require an assessment of whether serious damage was occurring, probably involving site visits, as well as a decision about whether a particular type of control might cause unnecessary suffering. The likely number of such applications would mean a massive work load for those involved in the proposed licensing authorities, with huge resource implications. At the same time, normal agricultural practices would be severely disrupted. I really am concerned about the effect that the increased bureaucracy would have on the farmer, whom many would consider to be quite burdened enough already, with rules and regulations to follow and forms to fill in.

The need for the farmer to protect his crops and livestock, and thus his livelihood, from pests is crucial and I fear that the Bill does not quite recognise that. This point is partly in reply to the argument of my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor). Let us suppose that, quite unexpectedly, a farmer's lambs or chickens are attacked by a fox. The hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies), in an excellent contribution to the debate, told us that that happens. What does the law-abiding farmer do? It is clear that the Bill would require him to put in for a licence to deal with any repetition of the situation by shooting or by some other method. How long would it take for that licence to come through? [HON. MEMBERS: "Years."] As I have already said—and as hon. Members have just pointed out—the men from the Ministry would have to visit to assess the seriousness of the damage to crops, land and poultry. They would then make a recommendation.

Mr. McNamara: I do not think that the right hon. Lady wants to mislead the House. If a farmer were presented with the difficulty to which she refers, clause 5 would apply. It says:

> "A person shall not be guilty of an offence under section 2 above if he shows
> (a) that his action was necessary for the immediate protection of any domestic or captive animal which was being attacked by a wild animal; and
>
> (b) that he was the owner . . . or was acting"

on his behalf.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand that point. I am addressing the central point of the Bill, which is that one expects licences to be gained by people who wish to protect their property.

Mr. Robert Banks: My right hon. Friend has spoken about the cost of the licensing system if the Bill were enacted. Does she agree that the cost would bear as heavily on urban dwellers as on those who live in the countryside and who benefit from the control of vermin?

Mrs. Rumbold: Exactly that effect would be felt, and I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that point. I fear that Labour Members do not quite understand the extent to which licensing could cause a considerable problem. The man from the Ministry would have to make a recommendation and someone else would have to agree it. Eventually, there would have to be a licence in the post. However much one does not want to recognise that for the purposes of the Bill, in reality that is the way in which large bureaucracies work.

I fear that it will be too late for many farmers. Of course licensing systems can work quickly, but the scale of operation proposed in the Bill would be massive. Staff and money would be required to provide the standard of service that would be needed. If the public are expected to foot the Bill, we wonder whether that would be acceptable to them. We wonder also whether it would have to be yet another burden for the farmers to undertake. In reality, the farmer would choose to protect his livestock by whatever method he favoured before his licence arrived. That is something that he would have to justify, but, as the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North has said, he would clearly be able to do so.

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): My right hon. Friend said at the beginning of her speech that it is a long time since the House debated the principle of the subject now under discussion. I believe that there has not been an objective inquiry into these matters since the late 1940s. As it is clear from our constituency mail and from the debate that there is a wide variation of interpretation of the factual evidence, does my right hon. Friend see any merit in establishing an objective inquiry so that those who wish to proceed may do so on the basis of agreed evidence?

Mrs. Rumbold: I am interested in the notion that my hon. Friend puts forward. For the purposes of the Bill, however, several arguments have been advanced extremely clearly. I think that a high percentage of hon. Members understand the issues that we are debating.

The problem that I have outlined would go beyond the countryside. The Bill would have implications for the statutory control of rats in urban area, for example. I make that point only to show that the comprehensiveness of the Bill means that it strays away from the hunt into areas which I believe would better have been avoided. These are not just technical points. The licensing system underpins the whole of the Bill and amounts to a serious flaw.

Many of the arguments advanced on the question of hunting today were similarly advanced during the debate in 1949, although inevitably there have been changes in attitudes since then. Perhaps one of the more regrettable changes is that the issue tends these days not to be the subject of clear and well-argued debate alone. There are protests and demonstrations, some of which are far from peaceful, instead of rational and reasoned argument of the sort that we have had today.

I cannot help feeling that there is an irony, and one which my right hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley) will enjoy. The Minister who replied to the 1949 debate was the then Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, who expressed his hope that the party that he represented, which I think was the same party as that which the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North now represents, would not go down in history as the party that was anxious to abolish the pleasures of others. That was one of the many reasons which he adduced in support of the then Government's decision to oppose the then Bill.

As hon. Members are well aware, the Government have consistently adopted a position of neutrality towards all legislation which touches on field sports. We take the view that participation in field sports is a matter of individual conscience. The Government will maintain this tradition of neutrality today. As I have said, however, much of the Bill—the licensing provisions and the implications for the control of pests—has little to do with the central issue. I must tell the House that if the Bill reaches Committee the Government will have to oppose those aspects.

While the Government remain neutral—I shall not vote one way or the other today—we nevertheless think it right that all those Members who wish to express a view one way or another on Second Reading, including members of the Government, should be perfectly free to do so.

1.33 pm

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): Either the Minister's heart was not in the speech that she just made or she has accidentally made a compelling case for giving the Bill a Second Reading. If that was the best argument that the Government could put up against the Bill of my good and hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara), I hope that the Bill will not only receive a Second Reading but do so by a huge majority.

I especially congratulate my good and hon. Friend because this is one of the rare occasions when we are invited to do something which has the clear and overwhelming support of electors in both town and country: 80 out of every 100 people polled, not in a straw poll but in a national opinion poll in November 1991, said that they disapproved of fox hunting. Indeed, I can tell Conservative Members that 67 out of every 100 people who say that they intend to vote Conservative at the coming election are also opposed to fox hunting.

Another poll, by NOP, found that 53 in every 100 rural residents disapproved of fox hunting, as against 69 per cent. of urban residents. On stag hunting, 79 per cent. of rural residents disapproved as against 81 per cent. of urban residents. On hare coursing 80 in every 100 disapproved, including 77 in every 100 in rural areas.

Mr. Gerald Howarth (Cannock and Burntwood): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Tredinnick: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Corbett: So the enthusiasts for blood sports are in a clear minority. It has been argued that the fox is a pest that must be got rid of. But 70 in every 100 farmers say that foxes do not significantly harm their interests, and 36 per cent. say that foxes are useful in controlling rabbits and rodents. Two out of every three farmers say that they suffer no financial loss from fox damage.

Indeed, we know that in areas where there are fox hunts —this has been said in today's debate—great care is taken by those who hunt to construct artificial earths and stick heaps for foxes to breed in and to feed and nurture foxes when the weather is hard.

Mr. George Howarth (Knowsley, North): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Corbett: I give way to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: Will the hon. Gentleman give way to me, too.

Mr. George Howarth: Does my hon. Friend agree that a lot has been made of the point that if we vote for the Bill today it will be the thin edge of the wedge for angling? Does he agree that the two things are distinct and separate and that it is possible to support anglers and angling while voting for the Bill today?

Mr. Corbett: I intend to come to that point later. My hon. Friend will be aware that sitting in front of him is my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell) who, when he was Minister for Sport and filled that office with such distinction, took the lead in setting up a national angling council to give anglers a unified national voice. My hon. Friend is, of course, right that the Bill has nothing to do with angling or shooting.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Corbett: In a moment.

If, as the hunters argue, foxes are a vicious pest that must be driven from the face of the countryside, why all the tender loving care towards them? Most hunts know exactly where foxes live in their area and could easily dispatch them by shooting, if they chose to do so. If it is argued that shooting runs the risk of injuring rather than killing the fox, one wonders whether it is appropriate for such bad shots to hold a shotgun or firearms licence as they would appear to be a danger not only to wild animals but to themselves and other sporting shooters.

Mr. Paice: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Corbett: I wonder why groups of people seek pleasure in the cruel destruction of so much of the wildlife with which we share this planet. It is a shame and a stain on a society which calls itself civilised that the badger has no enemy but man. Despite the law, men still dig up badger setts in a brutal and senseless manner. [HON. MEMBERS: "It is illegal."] Of course it is illegal, but I hope that no one is suggesting that because it is illegal it does not happen. Those of us who have seen badgers at close hand marvel at their beauty and dignity.

Some people—a minority—claim that it is perfectly all right to turn our countryside into the killing fields. There is no justification for any form of hunting with hounds in this day and age—if there ever was—and for such wanton cruelty to wildlife to continue under the name of sport. It is no such thing. It is the organised ritual destruction of wildlife, carried out in fancy dress amid great ceremony by those who pretend that they care for wildlife and its habitats. It degrades and disgraces the name of legitimate sport.

Why cannot those who live in the countryside and those of us who visit it simply enjoy it, marvel at its beauty, rejoice in its variety, find solace in its silence and listen, relax and learn?

Mr. Gerald Howarth: The country will be very interested to hear an official statement from the Labour Front Bench of the party's vitriolic hatred of people who pursue country sports. If the hon. Gentleman's case is that, because the opinion polls show that a large proportion of people are against hunting, the House should act against hunting, may I invite him to join me in the Lobby in support of capital punishment?

Mr. Corbett: No, not at all.

I also wonder what otherwise responsible parents feel they are doing when they encourage children as young as six or seven to see a fox, hare, stag or badger needlessly killed, and in some cases have those children blooded. What effect do they think that that has on a young mind, and what does killing for pleasure do to people who hunt over the years?

I am aware of, and have seen at first hand, the care that estate owners and landowners take with the conservation and protection of the threatened environment in our countryside, but if the price of that is that much of our countryside has to be needlessly soaked with the blood of wild animals, it is too high a price to pay. Those who hunt seem to claim that, in return for looking after the countryside, they should have the unfettered right to slaughter the wild animals that live there. That is a claim without foundation. As citizens privileged to have private access to the land, it is their duty to treat it with respect on behalf of us all and on behalf of future generations, and they should not seek—nor should they have—any privilege in return.

Some argue—although the polls show that it is not the case—that it is just us townies who oppose hunting with hounds. Although I help to represent a great city, I yield to no one in my devotion to, and concern for, the countryside, and I spend as much time as I can in it. To those who live in the countryside, I would also say that the environment is not just theirs—it belongs to each and every one of us.

Ms. Mowlam: Will my hon. Friend clarify the point about our being opposed to the people who go hunting? We have no objection to people who go hunting and we have tried to explain—as the Bill explains—that drag hunting is another option. Apart from the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin), no one has come up with a reason why drag hunting is not acceptable, and the hon. Gentleman's explanation is that it is like kissing one's sister. Does my hon. Friend have any view on that?

Mr. Corbett: My hon. Friend is quite right. The Bill is about the protection of wild mammals, not the protection of people.

Those who took part in yesterday's so-called farmers' protest at the Stoneleigh showground in Warwickshire were under close instruction to make themselves look more like a squad from "The Archers" than those engaged in bloodsports. The National Hunt Committee memo instructed:

> "There will be no hounds, no red coats, no top hats, no hunting horns. Banners should be made which state clearly the county you are from eg 'Gloucester farmers say this', 'Warwickshire farmers demand that' etc.".

Why the modesty? If there is nothing to hide, if there is nothing to be ashamed of, why no hounds, why no red coats, why no top hats and why no hunting horns? Are they not all part of the ritual that hunters claim is their birthright? Why was there no bold assertion of that ancient right? The truth is that somewhere behind those who organised yesterday's demonstration was just plain shame —a shame which prevented them from literally demonstrating in their true colours and a shame which stains their sporting claims.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Can the hon. Gentleman explain why a briefing note was sent to all his colleagues who feel as he does suggesting that they should refuse any invitations to go and talk to the hunts or to see how the hunts operate?

Mr. Corbett: I have not seen such a note; I did not get one. [HON. MEMBERS: "Nor did we."] I said earlier that there has been a bid by those who engage in blood sports to turn this into a townie-versus-villager issue. I shall read out a few random cuttings from a number of newspapers which circulate almost exclusively in rural areas. On 6 December 1991 the West Cumbria Evening News reported:

> "Cumbrian villagers are up in arms after claiming that fox hunters cause 'mayhem' in the countryside . . . Anne Watson, of Newcroft Kennels, Mawbray, said 'I was appalled at the mayhem they caused.'"

The Western Daily Press on 23 December 1991 stated:

> "Angry businessman Joe Hughes yesterday rapped the Beaufort hunt—a favourite of the Royals—after hounds and riders galloped through a field of valuable young ponies . . . huntsmen cut through a padlocked chain to gain access to the private paddock."

I do not doubt that those very same huntsmen would be quick to condemn those who indulge in violence and vandalism at football matches.

The Shropshire Star of 8 December 1991 reported:

> "Residents in a Shropshire village were angered when hounds from a hunt poured into gardens hot on the scent of a fleeing fox . . . the incident upset a number of villagers in Sheriffhales, near Telford."

My favourite newspaper, the Royston Crow, on 29 December 1991 reported:

> "A family looked on in horror as a fox was slaughtered in their garden by hounds from the Puckeridge and Thurlow Hunt."

I have here similar reports from around the country and a list as long as my arm going back some years.

No other group of people would be allowed to cause such unfettered mayhem and distress, annoyance and damage. In urban areas the police would rightly have charged them with public order offences before they could say "Tally-ho." We know from the polls that hunting with hounds upsets large numbers of people who live in the countryside. We also know that most people in the countryside are opposed to hunting with hounds. We know, too, that if it is claimed that foxes are such an expensive pest and menace, hunting them with hounds must be the most costly and inefficient method that anyone could possibly devise to deal with them. If the aim is to exercise some form of control, it would be better for the huntsmen to admit that that is a senseless ambition and turn to drag hunting.

I like the comments of Miss J. E. Holland, whose address is Beech Hall, Depden, Suffolk. From the heart of rural England, and from an address which might suggest political persuasion other than Labour, she says:

> "Whatever one's opinions of the morality of cub/fox hunting perhaps these alleged sportspeople should consider how they would feel if, for example, their homes were besieged by football fans with dogs. I can think of no other sport where such unruly and selfish behaviour is considered acceptable."

Neither can I, nor can my right hon. and hon. Friends, and nor can a substantial number of Conservative Members of Parliament.

There have been many comments about the Labour party's attitude towards angling and shooting—and indeed, to its animal welfare and wildlife policy generally. Among those who have questioned that is Jonathan Young, editor of the pro-hunting publication The Field. As a responsible editor, he should know that in 1978 the Labour party published a document called "Living Without Cruelty". It was the first major political party to publish such an animal welfare docment. It followed a decision by Labour's national executive committee to seek the abolition of all blood sports. That was reflected in our 1983 election manifesto, which stated:

> "Hare coursing, fox hunting and all forms of hunting with dogs will be made illegal."

In 1987, our election manifesto pledged to

In each of those documents, significant extra words followed those that I have quoted. I shall quote them now to rebut the false allegations made by those who hunt and by others in this House. The 1987 manifesto said that, following the pledge to ban all forms of hunting with hounds:

> "These changes will not affect shooting and fishing."

I ask the House to accept that that is Labour's policy now, that it will be Labour's policy at the coming election, and that it will remain Labour's policy. When silly Jonathan Young of The Field asserted in the Daily Mail on Tuesday:

> "An attack on one field sport is an attack on all",

he was talking through that part of his body which usually sits upon a saddle. I repeat that Labour has no intention of extending the ban on hunting with dogs to shooting or angling.

The Bill gives the House the opportunity to respond to the public demand. By majority, people in town and countryside want an end to the needless slaughter. I hope that the House will give the Bill a Second Reading on an all-party basis. If it does not, the new Labour Government will introduce a Bill early in that Government's life.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor (Upminster): I declare my interest —although it is well known to most hon. Members—as chairman of the British Field Sports Society, and I am a farmer—[HON. MEMBERS: "Disgraceful."] I can hear the cries of "Disgraceful" from the Labour Benches. That clearly gives away both the intention behind the Opposition's support of the Bill and what they intend the Bill to accomplish.

Until the speech of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) we had had a good debate, conducted in a fair and proper manner. The hon. Member for Erdington made one of the worst and most provocative speeches that I have heard in a long time. It was divisive —[Interruption.] The hon. Gentleman is pleased with himself. He claimed that he was looking for all-party support, but in fact he managed to divide both the parties and the town and countryside communities.

The hon. Gentleman's views, expressed as a representative of Birmingham, were clearly hostile to not only those who participate in field sports in the countryside but those who live and work the countryside. They were hostile to those who have the trust—that is the only word that he uttered with which I agree—of maintaining the countryside and improving it for future generations. That is the intention of those who live in the countryside. The consequences of Bills such as this, and the attitude of people like the hon. Member for Erdington, make their job more difficult and make it less likely that the countryside will be maintained for future generations in a way that those of us who live in it and work it try to achieve.

Before the hon. Member for Erdington spoke, we had had an interesting and stimulating debate. Several issues were raised, and I wish to deal with them briefly. The first question is: what lies behind the Bill? It has two purposes. The first is to eliminate cruelty to wildlife. In so far as that is its intention, we on this side of the House and in the British Field Sports Society certainly agree with it. We supported the Badger Bill in the last Session, once it has been put into a state in which it genuinely protected badgers and no longer clandestinely threatened hunting. That was also a hidden agenda in that Bill in its original form.

We would support any legislation that gave added protection to hedgehogs against being maltreated or to any wild animal against being beaten and cruelly ill treated deliberately by people who have no business to do so.

Whether such a law would be effective is another matter. We have legislated on badgers yet, sadly, I read in my papers last week of a revolting attack on badgers during the past two weeks or so, in which one was impaled from head to tail by a stake. Such behaviour is disgusting. No hon. Member and few people in the country, other than the appalling perpetrators, would support it. Unfortunately, however effective we try to make the law, it cannot wholly prevent such activity from taking place. In so far as it does take place, it must be condemned. If an hon. Member introduced legislation to give hedgehogs the protection that has been given to badgers, of course I would support it.

It is, however, not the main purpose of this Bill to give such protection in the countryside. As the hon. Member for Erdington made absolutely clear, the principal thrust of the Bill and the main intention of the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) and the supporters is undoubtedly to abolish fox hunting. The hon. Member for Erdington made clear his personal commitment to shooting and fishing. I should like to know how he justifies logically an attack on hunting on the ground of cruelty and distinguishes it from an attack on shooting or fishing on the same ground. There is no logical way of claiming that hunting is unnecessarily cruel while in the same breath saying that fishing is not. My right hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley) and others have expressed that point well.

In any culling or killing operation, an element of cruelty is undoubtedly involved. That is true in slaughter houses. It is true in particular of the Halal system killing. I think that those of the Jewish faith have that system of slaughter before they are prepared to eat any meat. There are degrees of cruelty in any method of slaughter. It is the job of the House, rightly, to try to eliminate that element of cruelty in both wild and domestic situations. Again, in so far as we are trying to do that, the British Field Sports Society, all my colleagues and I would agree.

The Bill is bad because that is not what it would do. It is picking on fox hunting for all the old, class-divisive reasons behind why the Labour party tried to do this before and it has no justification. It is not true that hunting is an activity that only toffs and very rich people enjoy. It is probably one of the best sports enjoyed by people of all walks of life.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: I reinforce completely what my hon. Friend has just said. Indeed, a constituent of mine wrote to me, saying:

> "I am not a toff or a snob but a welder by trade and work in a local factory in a dirty and demanding job. The reason I feel so strongly about this issue it is down to the freedom of choice if I want to go I go, if not I don't go but these people who want the sport banned are telling me I should not go. So much for the freedom of choice."

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Yes, it is about freedom of choice. The author of that letter expresses my precise point well. This sport is enjoyed by people from all walks of life. It is enjoyed by those who live in the town as well as those who live in the country. It has an important conservation role.

The attack on fox hunting is misconceived and politically guided. I find it astonishing that, in the 1990s, the old Labour party and, I am sorry to say, one or two misguided members of my party, are still walking down that precarious path.

Mr. Ian McCartney (Makerfield): Will the hon. Gentleman take the opportunity today to dissociate himself from the activities of the Quorn hunt, as shown on film? Will he also condemn those who control that hunt for their lack of commitment to stop the barbaric actions that were vividly shown on television a few months ago?

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I dissociate myself, the British Field Sports Society and the Masters of Foxhounds Association from the misconduct of those running the Quorn hunt on the day in question. That is why disciplinary action was taken against those masters and why the Masters of Foxhounds Association is now reviewing its rules. I hope that it will produce a code of conduct. That is why every step is being taken to ensure that such behaviour is not repeated.

The hon. Gentleman must be aware that every walk of life, even this place, is not populated by saints. In every aspect of human activity some people behave as they should not. The hon. Gentleman, however, asked me to dissociate myself from the specific conduct of the Quorn hunt. I have done so and I will do so on any occasion should it be repeated.

Mr. Budgen: Would my hon. Friend also concede that when that conduct occurred at the Quorn hunt it was dealt with effectively and quickly?

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Yes, it was. The disciplinary committee of the Masters of Foxhounds Association reviewed those activities as soon as they were brought to its attention. It took the necessary action as swiftly as possible.

Mr. Tredinnick: My hon. Friend should be aware that two votes have been taken in Leicestershire county council on whether hunting should be allowed on county council land. In 1982, the county council narrowly voted by a majority of four to allow such hunting. Another vote was taken after the Quorn incident and a decisive vote of 47 to 34—a majority of 13—found in favour of maintaining hunting on county council land. That suggests that my hon. Friend is winning the argument and it demonstrates to the House of Commons what an elected body in Leicestershire, the centre of hunting, feels about that issue.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: It is true that in Leicestershire and in many other counties this issue has been reviewed recently. In almost every case, the decision has been to continue with hunting across publicly owned land. That is welcome and it gives the lie to the point made by the hon. Member for Erdington about a huge lobby against field sports. Those who live in and have a duty to care for the countryside are, by a huge majority, in support of field sports. Because a large number of people have no knowledge of hunting and are susceptible to the cuddly bear image of the fox, which Beatrix Potter and others have managed to implant in people's minds, they are, on a superficial level, against fox hunting.

I remind hon. Members that we went through all this in the late 1940s. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State reminded us that the then Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Tom Williams, a member of the Labour party, urged hon. Members on both sides of the House to support fox hunting. He tabled a motion in 1925 to abolish it. [AN HON. MEMBER: "That was 40 years ago."] The reasons for supporting fox hunting are as valid now as they were then. In 1949 Mr. Williams argued his case on the issue of cruelty. It is on that issue that the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North is asking the House to support his Bill. Mr. Williams said:

> "the promoters of this Bill . . . regard hunting and cruelty as synonymous, thinking that to abolish the hunt is to abolish cruelty. On the contrary, they render rural recreation illegal, and do absolutely nothing towards abolishing or restraining cruelty".—[Official Report, 25 February 1949; Vol. 461, c. 2231.]

That is the truth. We have today reviewed extensively the alternative ways in which foxes can be culled, and the only Member in the whole debate to suggest that they should not be culled at all was my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden), who at least followed his argument to its logical conclusion by saying that foxes should not be culled but should be allowed to breed on and on—never mind the farmer, one might say, or the poultry keeper or even the foxes, which might find that there were too many of them for their own health. It was an absurd argument, but at least my hon. Friend carried to a logical conclusion the idea that it is cruel to hunt. It is not. It is more cruel to kill the animals by other means.

Mr. Marland: To add strength to my hon. Friend's argument, he will be interested to know that yet another local authority has voted to allow fox hunting to be carried on across its ground. Gloucestershire county council, having been heavily lobbied by all shades of opinion, has a substantial majority of councillors in favour of allowing fox hunting to continue on council-owned land. It is absolute nonsense to try to persuade us, as Labour Members do, that the majority of people are against fox hunting, when they are clearly not.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I thank my hon. Friend for making that point. When people consider the merits of the argument and focus on what is involved, they come down on the side of fox hunting.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I hope that my hon. Friend will forgive me for not giving way. I do not want to delay the House much longer.

There is no doubt that field sports, taken collectively, have always played an enormous role in the founding of the countryside as we enjoy it today. [Interruption.] I see the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North dissenting and, I think, making rude noises at me. That helps to show the ignorance of Labour Members in that they are unable to accept even that elementary point.

On my small farm I have eight pieces of woodland. Four of them were planted by my grandfather, who was chairman of the local hunt, two were planted by my father because he was a keen shot, and I have planted two because I am a keen shot. If we did not have country sports, none of those small areas of woodland would have been planted or would be maintained.

There is a glorious ignorance among Opposition Members about countryside matters. Indeed, the impression was given earlier that the trees were everlasting. Why would people take out woodland if fox hunting were abolished? That is a silly question to ask, because they would not take it out. But they would not renew it, either, and on reaching the end of its natural life, the woodland would not be replaced. Conservation and field sports and conservation and farming are synonymous. Sadly, Labour Members are unaware of that and they are careless about the future of the countryside and those who inhabit it.

Mr. Christopher Gill (Ludlow): Is my hon. Friend aware that a report in The Shropshire Star says that 4,000 people are against a ban on fox hunting and only 2,643 are in favour?

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Every time an hon. Member intervenes, new facts in favour of the continuance of fox hunting are produced. The argument is clearly being won by the fox-hunting lobby.

One of the saddest aspects of the measure is that unfortunately the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North does not understand what his Bill proposes to do. I say that with sadness because I know that his intention is honest and that he does not wish to mislead the House or the country. Yesterday, in a radio interview by Mr. Chris Stewart, the hon. Gentleman stated that the Bill covered all wilful cruelty to animals. He said that in the first part of his statement and repeated it a little later. The Bill does not mention "wilful" with regard to the cruelty aspect. Clause 1 states:

The hon. Gentleman has clearly not taken on board the fact that "wilful" refers only to the first half of the sentence. He infers that if the cruelty is inflicted by the nature of an act, as opposed to by someone intending to be cruel, that would not be covered by the Bill. But it is covered. Therefore, the hon. Gentleman misled the people who listened to that radio programme about the precise terms of the Bill.

The hon. Gentleman intervented when my right hon. Friend the Minister of State was arguing that the only defence under the Bill is to obtain a licence. My right hon. Friend explained how appallingly cumbersome that procedure would be and what a burden it would be on the Exchequer. The hon. Gentleman then intervened and referred to clauses 5 and 6. Howeever, those clauses refer only to clause 2, which relates to the use of a dog. Neither clause 5 nor clause 6 provides a defence for clause 3, which refers to snaring. Unless a person has a licence, he will be unable, for example, to snare a mole in his garden. I cannot believe that the hon. Gentleman's intention is to make someone whose garden has been ravaged by moles go to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for a licence to control moles—or rats and mice.

The Bill covers a range of necessary innocuous activities that the hon. Gentleman does not intend it to cover. Indeed, he did not know that the Bill covered them when he accepted the draftsman's proposal for the Bill

Mr. Colvin: My hon. Friend is discussing defences and drawing attention to clause 5, which is meant to provide an exemption. It says that action can be taken, where necessary,

> "for the immediate protection of any domestic or captive animal which was being attacked by a wild mammal".

Does not that mean that, to be effective, packs of foxhounds and walkie-talkie sets must be permanently on call? Clause 5 is totally ridiculous and unworkable.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Neither clause 5 nor clause 6 would protect farmers or people who live in the countryside, or even people with gardens in rural areas, from being accused of committing a criminal offence if they took the steps that were necessary to protect themselves or their property.

There is no doubt that this is a remarkably bad Bill. It is a pity that the House has had to spend this Friday debating a party political issue that should have been dead and buried long ago—[Interruption.] I thought that some Opposition Members might find that amusing. The debate should never have taken place.

May I close my remarks with a note of regret, as did Mr. Williams so long ago? The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North is the Opposition spokesman on Northern Ireland. The Bill would not even take effect in Northern Ireland, were it to be passed. It is sad that the hon. Gentleman did not find a better and more relevant cause to put before the House today. I echo the sentiment of Mr. Williams—a former Labour Minister—when he said, in 1949:

> 'Would it not be better to discuss the million people in camps in the depressed areas of Europe? Would it not be better to discuss what an hon. Member opposite writes about so eloquently in 'The Tribune'—what is going on behind the iron curtain?"—[Official Report, 25 February 1949; Vol. 461, c. 2238.]

Would not it be better to turn our attention to some of the serious issues facing the Government and the country today instead of wasting time by raking up, once again, the old, divisive socialist desire to abolish fox hunting?

2.9 pm

Mr. John McAllion (Dundee, East): I have been present throughout the debate, since 9.35 this morning. I find it most impressive that so many farmer-politicians have found time in their busy lives as farmers to take up their parliamentary duties on a Friday, in order to take part in a debate and vote on the important Bill before the House. Those of a more ungenerous nature than myself may suggest that vested interests are involved, because of the close association between farming and fox hunting, but I do not accept that calumny. I remain impressed by the devotion to duty shown by so many Tory farmers.

However, I am less impressed by the arguments that they advance against the Bill. The hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin), who is a member of the Select Committee on Energy, said that he was worried about the Bill's impact on unemployment, and on the 16,000 workers in the British equestrian trade. I could take the hon. Gentleman's concern far more seriously if he had shown any such concern for the thousands of Scottish workers made redundant when British Steel ratted on Ravenscraig and on the Scottish steel industry, or if he had shown any concern for the 2·6 million people whom the Government have made unemployed. I do not take such arguments seriously from opponents of the Bill.

It has been said that opponents of the Bill are just as concerned about the well-being of wild mammals as its supporters. They expect us to believe that, because of such concern, they continue to support the prolonged terrorising of foxes, which are wild mammals. They support the tearing apart of foxes by frenzied packs of hounds, and although they may convince themselves that by taking part in such barbaric practices they show their concern for the well-being of the fox, they would have a hard time convincing the fox of that—or, indeed, of convincing anyone whose view was less prejudiced than theirs.

The hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) began the day with a point of order. Although it was not a bogus point of order, the information that he conveyed was bogus. The hon. Gentleman complained about the postcards distributed by the League Against Cruel Sports to its supporters, some of which have been passed on to hon. Members to try to persuade them to support the Bill. He gave an example of one of his constituents whose name had been used on a postcard without his knowledge or permission. On that shaky foundation the hon. Gentleman argued that the whole exercise conducted by the League Against Cruel Sports was bogus, that the names being sent to hon. Members were fake, and that support for the Bill outside the House was far less than was being claimed.

The hon. Gentleman was eager to interpret in a different light the one example that he gave. However, opponents of the Bill, concerned about the massive support whipped up by the League Against Cruel Sports, may have decided to undermine that campaign by sending bogus postcards. I agree with the advice that has already been given to the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes to pass the matter to the Humberside police. I am sure that they will be able to get to the bottom of it and find out who is trying to kid whom.

The right hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. N. Ridley) asked whether it was really in the public interest to ban fox hunting. He said that, after all, those who take part choose voluntarily to do so, and that the landowners on whose land hunting takes place give their permission. On that basis, he suggested that the public interest was in no way harmed.

Such logic could be applied to all the other activities that the House has already banned, such as bear baiting, dog fighting and cock fighting. If landowners were prepared to allow people to bait bears on their land and people were prepared voluntarily to take part, would that make it all right? Would that mean that such activities were not against the public interest? Of course not. That was an especially weak argument and, given the high offices of state that the right hon. Gentleman has held, one would have thought that he would know better.

The right hon. Gentleman said that shooting was a crueller way of dealing with foxes than fox hunting. He cited the example of bad shots, who may wound a fox, which leads to unnecessary cruelty and suffering being inflicted. But he could not give a single example of such a thing having happened. Only once during the debate has such an example been given. That was the only evidence that we have heard that such a thing has ever happened. Yet we know, from the RSPCA, the League Against Cruel Sports and other animal welfare bodies that there are countless examples of unnecessary cruelty and suffering being inflicted on foxes by the fox hunters. Given the balance between the two, it is essential that the House should support the Bill. Hon. Members who oppose the Bill will have a hard time convincing voters that it is less cruel to pursue a terrified animal for more than an hour and attack it with terriers or tear it apart with a pack of fierce and frenetic hounds. Nobody is convinced by such specious arguments.

Perhaps the weakest argument was the one about pest control, which does not stand any examination. Opponents of the Bill say that they are concerned about pest control. Why do some hunts rear foxes with the intention of hunting them? No Conservative Member could answer that question. Hunting has nothing to do with pest control. Other hunts keep artificial earths to attract foxes into the area and then hunt them. I thought that the idea of pest control was to limit the number of foxes and not to attract them to an area so that they could then be hunted.

It was said that it was right and natural for man to hunt —a call not so much to go back to the countryside as to the caves. It was said that killing the fox was not important. If it is not important how can it be argued that hunting is necessary to control pests? The Bill's opponents defeated their own arguments and cannot expect anyone to take them seriously. It was said that the chase was all important. What was meant was that the sport—the entertainment—was all important, and that is the kernel of the debate. The Bill's opponents say that it is justified, for reasons of entertainment and sport, to inflict suffering and cruelty on foxes and other wild mammals for the pleasure of men. That is unjustifiable and must be stopped.

Mr. Rupert Allason (Torbay): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McAllion: No. There is not enough time to give way.

We heard the quite extraordinary case of Mr. Harry Roberts, a huntsman who in 1941 was called up to join the Army. As soon as he was called up, the foxes went wild and the number of lambs being killed by foxes shot up. It was said that that was proof positive that fox hunting was necessary to protect hill farming. Of course there are other interpretations, such as that that must have been the first case of draft dodging. If Dan Quayle had thought of such an ingenious device, I am sure that he would have used it in connection with Vietnam. The story proves nothing because there is no proof that fox hunting is necessary to keep pests under control.

I should like to refer to a group called Animal Concern, which describes itself as a select committee of members representing countryside and conservation organisations. I received a letter from the organisation, as I am sure have other hon. Members. That letter does not name the countryside and conservation organisations. For all we know, it may be the Quorn hunt. How can we take seriously the representations of Animal Concern? It says that the real issue at stake in the Bill——

Mr. Moate: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You will know that some hon. Members have been here throughout the debate and have not had an opportunity to speak. You will also note that two Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen have taken up an inordinate amount of time by using the subterfuge of speaking from the Back Benches. Will you inquire into that to see whether it is proper for Front-Bench spokesmen to move to the Back Benches and take up the time of the House? If the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) continues to take up so much time, do we assume that he is trying to talk out the Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Nothing out of order has occurred so far.

Mr. McNamara rose in his place and claimed to move, That the Question be now put.

TIMESHARE CONTRACTS (TIME FOR RECONSIDERATION) (SCOTLAND) BILL

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Second Reading what day? Not moved.

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): On behalf of my hon. Friend, I move.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman should be more alert than apparently he is. Second Reading what day?

Mr. Haynes: On behalf of my hon. Friend, Monday 21 February.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not a Monday.

Mr. Haynes: Friday 21 February, Sir.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 21 February.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION BILL

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Second Reading [24 January].

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken. Second Reading what day?

Mr. Menzies Campbell (Fife, North-East): With the leave of the Member in charge of the Bill, Friday 13 March.

Debate further adjourned till Friday 13 March.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (SUPPLY OF MEDICAL EQUIPMENT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read

Computing

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Boswell.]

2.50 pm

Sir Ian Lloyd (Havant): I am glad that the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) is leaving the Chamber. I fear that if he were to oppose to what I have to say in such stentorian tones, I would not get very far.

On the first occasion that I raised the question of computing in the House, I produced a microchip on which it was possible to see about four transistors—and on that I made some fairly far-fetched predictions. Today, it would not be possible to see the structure unless we had an electron microscope, and we all know that such visual aids are deplored by Mr. Speaker. I am saved the burden of elaborate descriptions by the timely publication of the Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology report just before Christmas. It is the implications for the nation and for Parliament that I want to discuss today, and I am glad to have the opportunity to do so.

It is not just the machine that I wish to discuss, prodigious though its capacity may be, but the institutions, processes and policies required for its effective use. It is not just an old mainframe, as they were called, multiplied by 1,000, 10,000 or even 100,000 times. The difference performance is both quantitative and qualitative. The problems that the new machines can address are those facing mankind, and they are of much the same order of magnitude. Some are known as the "grand challengers", and we all recognise their scale. For example, the data produced by a satellite measuring environmental change amounts to about 1 trillion signals per hour. That would require 40 Washington telephone books per day to store.

I shall give two more illustrations. The human heart consists of millions of cells that communicate electrically in a most complex pattern. To understand how it works or fails, scientists have to construct models. Professor Dennis Noble of Oxford university presented a fascinating paper in Paris this week, pointing out that, even with the fastest existing IBM machine, at present the modelling of a few seconds of the heart's activity requires several minutes. On such a machine, modelling 100,000 cells of what is known as the sinus, let alone the hundreds of millions in the ventricle, is extremely expensive and impractical.

The new type of machine, known as a massively parallel machine, makes that possible. Alas, Professor Noble has to use the United States army computing centre in Minnesota for his work. A new machine on the horizon enables him to envisage what he describes as a reconstruction of the electrical mechanisms of a heart attack. Such is the power of the teraflop machine which Columbia university aims to have developed by 1996.

It is hardly surprising that the machine has been described as the > "critical tool of the lifesciences in the 21st century".

and an even more significant description is that it

> "provides the human race with its third scientific investigative technique after theory and experiment."

It has immense powers of simulation, which enable us to detect similarities and differences where size and complexity are simply too vast for the unaided human mind.

It is worth making one more point. The machine's technical rate of development is unprecedented for an artefact of such complexity. Its computational power feeds back rapidly into its own design, construction and manufacture.

Why is this important to Parliament and the nation? There are several reasons. Senator Gore of the United States Senate summarised it in a statement he made on introducing a Bill recently:

> "The nation which most completely assimilates high performance computing into its economy will very likely emerge as the dominant intellectual, economic, and technological force in the next century."

That is some claim, but it has evidently been fully accepted by Japan, the United States, Germany and France. I wish that I could say the same for ourselves.

The Japanese Government have formally stated that the development of massively parallel high-performance computing is that country's

> "most important priority for the 90s and has allocated some £200 million for the development of what are known as 'neural networks'."

In 1985, we and the Japanese each had four so-called super-computers. In the brief space of five years, the Japanese have acquired 176, most of which they make themselves, outstripping the United States, which has 162, western Europe, which has 101, and the United Kingdom, which has 21. Even more alarming, perhaps, is that Mexico now has more super-computer capacity than we have. All significant indices of growth and expenditure are in the POST report, which is available to Parliament, so I shall not weary the House by repeating them.

Qualitative aspects are more significant. There is a virtuose circle of semiconductor capability and computing capability which the Japanese in particular have appreciated. They will design and make most things first, fastest and best, as the super-computer facilitates total quality control, among other things. That has particular significance for cars, aerospace, electronics of every kind, and therefore the worldwide pattern and distribution of employment. It is that realisation which has doubtless prompted the United States to set up a series of federally funded super-computer training centres, one of which, at Cornell university, is matched possibly only by that at Edinburgh. It has also prompted a series of United States policy responses, emanating primarily from Congress and the President. I shall describe them, as they are a template against which, I fear, we must judge our own parliamentary and Executive response.

Since 1989, the United States Congress has introduced at least five major Bills, starting with the National High-performance Computing Technology Act. Its committees have conducted seven hearings. It has established a national advisory committee on semiconductors, which concluded recently that, unless the United States spent $1·2 billion per annum on research and development in this area, it would

The President's Office of Science and Technology Policy proposed in 1989 that there should be a massive five-year programme for high-performance computing and networks. Expenditure over five years has doubled from $450 million to £1,000 million. Since 1976, as the OTA pointed out last year, federal funding has grown faster than for any other scientific discipline in the United States. Since their power is dependent on communication networks, the Administration has accepted a programme to raise the network capacity from the present 1·5 megabits to 45 megabits for 200 to 300 users this year and 1 to 3 gigabits, increasing to the order of 1,000 for major research facilities from 1996, when 45 megabits will be available to 1,000 separate institutions.

I now come to the western European and the United Kingdom response to the challenge. There is, I am sorry to say, only one word to describe our response in the United Kingdom. I had on my original draft the word "lamentable", but I thought that that was too harsh. It is a curate's egg—good in parts. Yesterday, I checked with the Library and discovered that, by comparison in the same period, we have had the subject mentioned in six questions in this House, in four in the Lords and in one early-day motion. In December 1990, there was a brief late-night debate on our contribution to the European framework, Jessi and Eureka programmes.

We have, it is true, a £34 million massively parallel computing programme, since this is an area in which we as a nation excel intellectually, as it were. After the POST report, I understand that the Department of Trade and Industry increased its funding for our network, known as JANET, by some £10 million to upgrade it to SuperJANET.

I further understand that the Cabinet Office has now set up a super-computing and networking team to consider the policy implications in the POST report. We have also agreed to take a third of a 25 per cent. share jointly with France and Germany in the European Community's megastream project. The other funds will be provided by the Community and Cable and Wireless.

Rather more depressing is the information that the Advisory Board for the Research Councils has recommended a bit more money for supercomputing over the next three years—the equivalent of £6 million, £7 million and £7·5 million. One must set that in the context of the £90 million spent per annum by Michigan university or any of the major Japanese producers or users. I fear that that will cause a powerful attack of dismay, which will overwhelm us and for which the rhetorical tranquillisers that we employ in this Chamber will prove no cure.

I fear that Parliament must take its full share of the blame for this state of affairs. In the past 18 months, we have screamed at each other across the Floor about unemployment and heavens knows what else, oblivious of the fact that we are witnessing events of far greater significance, which are far more compressed in time, than the industrial revolution.

The OECD, to which we all subscribe, is not unaware of those facts. In its report, "Interdependence and Co-operation in Tomorrow's World", there was a stark warning from Sir Ralf Dahrendorf,

> "There are those who argue that employment is but a passing problem . . . Growth plus training, they say, will deal with all but the most resistant unemployment and in any case there is enough work for all. Such views overlook the deeper issue which is at stake . . . Work, in the sense of paid employment (jobs) has been the key to the entitlement structures of modern societies and to their growth potential. At the same time social, economic and technical factors have conspired to reduce the role of work in people's lives . . . work has become scarce . . . and as a result work based on entitlement structures can no longer be sustained . . . Growth and employment are decoupled."

I agree with that.

The principal technical factor is information technology, which the worldwide motor car industry has been discovering for some time, as it responds to a competitor who made that discovery about 10 years before it. What is as clear as daylight is that, although there is every prospect of manufacturing output and world trade recovering, that recovery will not inevitably or necessarily produce a recovery in employment, especially not in the manufacturing industry. That industry is now following, rather more rapidly, the example set by agriculture, which, in the past few decades, has suffered a dramatic decline.

For that reason I accept Sir Ralf's final conclusion:

> "Traditional big government cannot continue. It is financially non-viable and organisationally inefficient and fails to engender the degree of support that is a necessary condition of effectiveness . . . New entitlement issues are as much a result of old solutions as they are answered by them. Neither the new unemployment nor the new poverty can be remedied by the traditional instruments of the Welfare State."

What are our policy responses? First the good news, as they say. I was informed only this morning that the United Kingdom has the largest single computerisation programme in western Europe. That is excellent, but with what is it concerned—wealth creation or wealth redistribution? Alas, it is the latter. Doubtless that is justifiable and necessary, but should it have come first?

I am advised that the Science and Engineering Research Council, acting as agent for the Advisory Board for the Research Councils is considering the purchase of a large Cray vector machine and that the ABRC has recommended a modest increase in expenditure on this of £6 million, £7 million and £7·5 million over the next three years. That is extremely modest when one realises that the world's most powerful machine, the SX3 made by NEC in Japan costs between £10 and £15 million for a single output. The bad news is that, although that particular Cray offers between a threefold and a fourfold improvement in performance, a major single university in the United States is taking delivery of a Cray which offers a sixteenfold improvement.

The main question for us is not whether it is too late for the United Kingdom or western Europe to compete with the Crays. It is worth remembering that Europe has not one single producer in this area. That round has been lost. The question is whether by appropriate policy decisions, we will be able to attain and maintain a satisfactory position in the massively parallel computers sector, based on the British transputer in which we and Europe have considerable strength and maintain the lead. Two of the five manufacturers in Europe are in the United Kingdom.

The answer is yes, but there are some ifs. First, we must recognise that this is what is known as an enabling technology, which is crucial to the economic and industrial performance of western Europe. Secondly, whatever our political prejudices—I know how deep they run in the House—we in the United Kingdom will not succeed unless we recognise that if our competitors' programmes are based on a massive combined effort of state and private resources, we alone will not be able to do it without an injection of public money on a sufficient scale.

Thirdly, we shall not succeed if we pitch the level of investment commitment just below that needed for success and withdraw support when the going gets rough. The Inmos story deserves a closer analysis than it has so far received, for yet again British innovation has formed the basis of a massive new industry and investment abroad. This morning's announcement by IBM that that large organisation was going for a massively huge parallel computer has great significance.

In that context, we should consider carefully the recommendations of the Office of Science and Technology Policy's report to President Bush, since they apply to us. One says, for example:

> "Unless the nation acts immediately to promote its position in critical generic technologies, United States competitiveness will erode further with disastrous consequences for . . . jobs, economic growth and national security."

Another says that the advanced technology programme is designed to provide support without picking winners and losers, and that that requires in turn

> "a fundamental change in the way United States industry competes in the market place."

The enabling Bill enjoys bipartisan support. Congress has provided $289 million this year and $347 million next year.

Fourthly, as a nation we need more thinking and analysis—with less ranting and raving—not least in this place. The whole profile of the science base, and science policy and its direction and priorities must achieve a much higher profile, and Parliament and Government together must do that. It cannot be done without an informed Parliament.

Fifthly, we must accept that the age of automation has arrived and will not go away. It is not a question of whether and how we should revive manufacturing employment, but whether and how to maintain the wealth-creating capacity of the manufacturing system, which is now following the pattern set by agriculture.

The concomitant question—how to restructure the whole of the entitlement apparatus previously attached to manufacturing employment—is far more difficult, and the sooner we start thinking about it the better. To do otherwise may afford political parties the illusion that they are shooting each other in the body, but in practice we shall all be shooting the nation in the foot.

Sir Herman Bondi, the former master of Churchill college, said recently, in a brilliant paper on Isaac Newton, that the problems faced by society could be classified into three parts—that 80 per cent. were trivial, 19·5 per cent. were insoluble and it required a genius to identify and solve the remaining 0·5 per cent. We have the tools and we know the 0·5 per cent. We must now finish the job.

3.7 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Edward Leigh): I wish at the outset to welcome the report on high performance computing prepared by the Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology. As the House knows, my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) is the distinguished chairman of that body. He is probably the leading advocate of science in the House, which is why we always listen with great care to what he has to say.

We are indebted to my hon. Friend for bringing to our attention the main findings of the report. He always speaks with great knowledge. Indeed, the House of Commons is at its best when an hon. Member with such deep interest and knowledge of a subject speaks on it. We in government do our best to address the problems that we face. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for the way in which he made his speech.

The Government share my hon. Friend's view that high-performance computing is a vitally important and rapidly developing area of information technology. It is right that the House should devote time to discussing that important aspect of technology, which has far-reaching implications for research and development activities, in academia and in industry and commerce.

There has been a great deal of discussion and activity in that area in many countries. The findings of the POST report will make a valuable contribution to the consideration that has been given by the Government to the priorities for the provision and application of high-performance computers in the United Kingdom.

My Department and the Department of Education and Science have a particular interest in that, but other Departments are also involved; for example, the Department of the Environment has important commitments to supercomputing for climate modelling research.

My Department believes that it is important to emphasise the solutions which this high-performance can deliver and to promote the benefits that can be gained by industry and academia.

As for the development of high-performance computers, as the POST report identifies, the highest performance supercomputers are currently built exclusively in the United States and Japan. My hon. Friend brought out that point in his speech. But the manufacturers of parallel computers are much more widely spread, and this country is particularly well represented in both the design and the development of those machines.

The "Transputer"—a powerful "computer on a chip" especially suitable for parallel processing—was designed and built here, and a number of companies here have developed powerful machines based on that device.

The "distributed array processor"—an alternative approach to parallel processing—was designed and built here, and it received the Queen's award for innovation in 1991.

My Department and the Department of Education and Science, through the Science and Engineering Research Council, have given substantial support to research and development in the field of parallel architecture computers, through our joint framework for information technology; and I assure my hon. Friend that we shall continue to do so.

The really large research and development activities that are necessary today to produce the next generations of parallel machines are now being supported by the Commission of the European Communities, under the Esprit programme. We believe that that is the right way ahead for our companies and academics, rather than concentrating on solely national initiatives. Only through such an approach can our companies access the world-size markets needed for commercial success.

Our policy is—here as elsewhere—to ensure that the objectives of the European Commission's initiative are realistic and attainable, and that the expenditure plans are well judged and reflect appropriate priority for that among other areas within the Esprit framework.

The availability of high-performance computers has also been raised. The POST report considers two aspects of availability: the provision of machines of the highest performance to researchers in the academic community; and their availability to industrial research workers.

The provision of supercomputing facilities for academic research is the responsibility of the Department of Education and Science, through its Advisory Board for the Research Councils. I shall ensure that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science is made fully aware of the excellent points made by my hon. Friend today. That board now has responsibility for supporting the three academic supercomputing centres at Manchester university, London university and the Rutherford Appleton laboratory of the Science and Engineering Research Council. My right hon. and learned Friend has recently made available the sum of £20 million over the next three years to enhance the provision of facilities for the research councils and the academic sector.

Many other university departments have both advanced computing resources and a pool of skills in high-performance computing with parallel machines. I believe that all that activity must be taken into account when assessing how well our academic community is provided for in this vitally important area.

To make the best use of the national high-performance computing resources, high-speed networks are required so that remote users can communicate with the machines and receive their results. To provide such facilities for the academic sector, I am pleased that the Department of Education and Science has been able to make additional capital funds available to the Universities Funding Council. I am sure that my hon. Friend will welcome that. This will allow them to begin the development of a new, high-speed academic network, SuperJANET, that will offer many benefits in addition to improving access to high-performance computers. I was grateful to my hon. Friend for mentioning SuperJANET in his speech.

My Department welcomes this activity and wishes to explore ways in which industrial users could gain access to such a high-speed network. Both academic and industrial users will also need access to efficient high-speed networking across Europe and worldwide. We are supporting current European network programmes and further discussions that aim to extend that capability.

Obviously, availability to industry is a matter of particular interest to me and, although my Department does not consider it appropriate to use public funds to make machines directly available for industry, we accept that there is a need for greater involvement by the industrial sector. We want to ensure that industry can make informed choices about the computing resources appropriate for particular applications.

We are aware that few organisations have yet installed their own high-performance computers, but some are exploring the possibilities of such machines, using the resources available from academia. Still more organisations are collaborating in our new programme to demonstrate the development of real industrial applications on high-performance machines. It is the Government's role to address sluggish development in the marketplace, and to provide encouragement to industry to address its own problems, but, as I am sure my hon. Friend agrees, the commercial decisions must always remain with industry. I hope that my hon. Friend will note the point that I wish to emphasise—that it is indeed our role to address sluggish development in the marketplace. Therefore, the debate is timely. As one of the constraints to market development, the POST report identifies lack of software and difficult programming as barriers to the industrial take-up of the machines.

My Department, with the Science and Engineering Research Council, has recently launched the parallel applications programme, to help to overcome those barriers. The programme has a total value of about £39 million, with £13 million of Government funding, and it is supporting four centres, chosen by competition, at Edinburgh, London, Oxford and—I am glad to say—Southampton. Those centres will collaborate with industrial partners to develop solutions to real industrial problems. Such applications will act as exemplars to other industrial organisations of what can be achieved with this technology. They should indeed then be able to offer the "one stop shop" support for parallel computing which the POST report recommends, based on the example of the university of Maryland super-computing centre.

I am sure that the parallel applications centres will make a major impact on industrial competence and take-up in this vital area. My Department is also considering whether it is appropriate to mount additional initiatives.

I have spoken about initiatives within academia, and the academic role in ensuring that academia has the skills and capabilities needed to prosecute its own research programmes. Academia has a role, too, in reducing the barriers to industrial take-up—by communicating new developments to industry in a way which is relevant and exciting, by seeking industrial involvement in appropriate projects, and especially by producing skilled graduates, who will move into their industrial careers and transfer that important technology with them.

In conclusion, I welcome the POST report, and confirm that the Government are sympathetic to many of the views expressed therein. We do not propose sweeping or dramatic measures in the short term, but I am confident that, with the initiatives already under way and planned, and with the technical developments on the horizon, the United Kingdom is on course to be in a much stronger position in high-performance computing over the next few years. The debate will have brought that process ever closer. I am grateful to my hon. Friend.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at seventeen minutes past Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 3 February 1992

ENVIRONMENT

Enterprise Zone, Whitehaven

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has yet received the consultants' report into the effects of an enterprise zone in Whitehaven; (2) when he intends to publish the findings of the report into the effects of an enterprise zone for Whitehaven; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We expect to receive the final draft of the consultants' report on enterprise zone status for Barrow and Whitehaven shortly. It is not the Department's practice to publish these reports. There is a statutory consultation procedure before any zones can be designated.

Part-ownership Schemes

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total cost to date of setting up, publicising and administering the flexi-ownership or rents into mortgage schemes piloted in (a) Basildon and (b) Milton Keynes; and how many tenants have so far acquired part-ownership of their homes under this scheme.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 9 December 1991, Official Report, column 314. Since then, three more sales have been completed in Basildon where the pilot scheme is still in operation, bringing the total sales to 98.

Personal Allowances and Housing Premiums

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how (a) personal allowances and (b) housing premiums are established within applicable amounts calculated against net weekly income, for the purposes of renovation grant applications; and what account of regional cost variations is made in this process.

Mr. Yeo: The personal allowances and premiums used to calculate the applicable amount in the test of resources for house renovation grants are based on those used for housing benefit. They cover the essential weekly living expenses of the individual grant applicant and the applicant's family and are uprated annually in line with changes to housing benefit. The universal grant premium of £22 per week awarded to all grant applicants is intended to cover other household outgoings, including housing costs. It is also uprated annually in line with inflation. No account is taken of regional cost variations.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how (a) housing premiums and (b) personal allowances take account of individual circumstances; and what influence mortgage rates or rent variations have upon assessments.

Mr. Yeo: The test of resources for house renovation grants largely follows housing benefit rules in taking account of the individual circumstances of grant applicants. Each applicant and relevant person associated with an application is awarded personal allowances to reflect their particular needs. A variety of premiums may also be awarded in respect of special needs such as lone parenthood, old age or disability. These are added together to provide an overall assessment of individual needs. The £22 grant premium which all grant applicants receive to cover other household expenses, including housing costs, is then added to the total. Changes in interest rates are reflected in the calculation of the national loan a grant applicant is deemed able to afford. No account is taken of rent variations.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the English housing condition survey to be published.

Mr. Yeo: The results will be published in 1993.

Housing Renovation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he encourages local authorities to identify housing in severe need of renovation; what resources are targeted towards such housing; and what was the total renovation grant awarded in the last year in which figures are available for households without elderly and disabled persons.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities are required to consider housing conditions in their area at least once a year to identify unfit properties and the best way to deal with them. Each authority receives an allowance for specified capital grant, as part of its annual housing investment programme allocation, for expenditure on private sector renewal including house renovation grants and slum clearance. Information on approved renovation grant expenditure on households without elderly and disabled persons is not available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in descending order the 1992-93 standard spending assessments per head for designated poll tax contributions in each district council area in England and also show in each case figures per head per poll tax payer for (a) enhanced population, (b) density, (c) sparsity and (d) all-ages social index, in each case multiplied by the appropriate scaling factor.

Mr. Portillo: A table showing the requested information has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to bring forward legislation to implement his draft circular on local authorities' assets in companies.

Mr. Portillo: The Government propose to implement part V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 —local authorities' interests in companies—in due course when the drafting of the necessary secondary legislation has been completed.

Nitrogen Dioxide

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on United Kingdom compliance with the EC directive on nitrogen dioxide.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom has complied in full with the EC directive on nitrogen dioxide. Except for a purely technical breach at the west London monitoring site in London in 1989, of which the Commission was informed as required by the directive, no breach of the directive's air quality limit values has occurred.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the criteria used in choosing site locations for nitrogen dioxide monitoring stations.

Mr. Baldry: For the purposes of monitoring compliance with EC directive 85/203/EEC, sites have been chosen in accordance with the criteria set out in annex III of the directive. In summary, sites must include examples of areas predominately affected by motor pollution and of areas where discharges from fixed sources also make a significant contribution to pollution. They should be chosen as far as possible from sites where the risk of public exposure is greatest.

Urban Air Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received from Environmental Resources Ltd. in respect of extending the urban air pollution monitoring network.

Mr. Baldry: Advice from Environmental Resources Ltd. is contained in its report to the Department of the Environment—"Extended Urban Monitoring—a Feasibility Study 1991"—a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. The first phase of an extension of the network, on the lines recommended, came into operation on 23 January this year.

Pollution (Prosecutions)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 478, if he will name the companies successfully prosecuted by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution since 30 November 1990, the locations of the incidents and the type of pollution caused.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is as follows:

Company	Location	Offence	Pollution caused
George M. Watson (Construction) Ltd.	Denholme, Bradford	Operation of mineral crushing and screening plant without registration	No pollution
Cotswold Stone Quarries	Swellwold Quarry, Stow on the Wold	Operation of mineral works without registration	No pollution
North West Aggregates Ltd.	Huyton, Merseyside	Operation of road stone coating plant without registration	No pollution
Hickson and Welch	Castleford, Yorkshire	Operation of a chemical process without registration	No pollution
Atomic Energy Authority	Harwell, Oxon	Breach of conditions of authorisation in relation to discharge of radioactive tritium gas	No material pollution: no hazard to environment or health
British Nuclear Fuels plc	Springfields, Lancs	Breach of conditions of authorisation in relation to disposal of low level solid radioactive waste	No material pollution: no hazard to environment or health

Air Quality

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his action plan for dealing with breaches of World Health Organisation and EC air quality standards on reduction of pollutants.

Mr. Baldry: The World Health Organisation does not set air quality standards, but rather guidelines intended to provide background information and guidance to Governments. The environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" and the anniversary report published last September contain the Government's action plan for reducing air pollution, including measures to ensure that the few remaining areas where a risk of breaching the limit values for smoke and sulphur dioxide in EC directive 80/779/EEC remains will comply fully when their derogations from the directive expire in April 1993.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which 20 local authorities have the highest level of rent arrears.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which 20 local authorities have the highest rent arrears as a percentage of the total rent roll.

Sir George Young: I have today arranged for information on rent arrears in all English local authorities, as at 1 April 1991, to be placed in the library.

On this date total rent arrears owing to housing authorities in England amounted to some £430 million, representing 8·5 per cent. of the total rent collectable in 1990-91. This is an increase of £70 million—18 per cent. —compared with 1 April 1990. The 20 authorities with the poorest performance, in terms of arrears as a percentage of their rent roll, account for 50 per cent. of the total. Of these, 10 account for £156 million—37 per cent.—of the national total and all have arrears of over 20 per cent. of the rent collectable, the highest—Southwark—having estimated rent arrears of 38·5 per cent. London accounts for £200 million—46 per cent. of the total—and has eight of the 10 and 12 of the 20 poorest performing authorities.

These figures show that the position in far too many authorities has worsened since 1989-90. Authorities with similar holdings of stock and rent levels, and subject to similar economic pressures, turn in widely different levels of performance. The explanation for this lies in the quality of their management. The annual reports which most authorities have now supplied to their tenants, and to my Department, show considerable variation in management standards. Efficiency at collecting rent is the most fundamental of these standards. Authorities cannot hope to deliver effective services to their tenants if they do not collect the rent which pays for those services.

It is particularly disappointing that there was no overall change in the position in London at March last year, though some authorities have taken vigorous action to improve their performance.

All councils have a duty to look after the interests of all their tenants. Better performance in collecting rents will increase resources available for housing and reduce pressure for rent increases.

Area Protection Grant

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any local authorities to add to the list, given in his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 276, of those which will lose area protection grant in 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 31 January 1992]: I regret that the table given in my answer of 23 January was incomplete. The correct information is shown in the following table.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victims received compensation of between £750 and £1,000 from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage this was of the total number of victims who received compensation.

Mr. John Patten: Details of awards made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board within various bands are given in the board's published annual reports. Copies are held in the Library.

The precise number of awards between £750 and £1,000 is not available, but the estimated figure for 1990-91 is 5,760, which represents 16·4 per cent. of all awards made.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what checks are made to ensure that all vehicles on the road have valid vehicle excise duty licences;

(2) what procedures are followed if a vehicle is found on the road without a valid current vehicle excise duty licence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Police officers and traffic wardens support regular enforcement campaigns run by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. Police officers and traffic wardens also routinely report the details of parked vehicles displaying either invalid vehicle excise duty—VED—licences or none at all to the DVLA which checks whether VED offences have been committed and takes any enforcement action required. Where other motoring offences have also been detected all offences are generally processed by the police.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what penalties are applicable to a person convicted of owning or keeping a motor vehicle on the road without a valid motor vehicle excise duty licence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A person convicted under section 8 of the Vehicles (Excise) Act 1971 of the offence of using or keeping on a public road a motor vehicle without a valid excise duty licence is liable to a maximum penalty of a fine of up to £400 or five times the annual duty chargeable for the vehicle, whichever is greater. In addition the payment of any back duty which is owing is recoverable by court order at the same time. The maximum fine for the offence is to be increased to £1,000 later this year.

Prisons

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has the power to terminate contracts with privately run prisons in the event of either a breach of contract or change of Government policy.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Wolds prison will be covered by crown immunity.

Mrs. Rumbold: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedure will be followed immediately after the admission of an inmate to Wolds prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: The requirements for the reception and induction procedures at Wolds are set out in section C and D of the operational specification, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House on 2 May 1991.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether extra costs in the event of prisoner disorder at Wolds prison involving the use of the emergency services or crown employees will be met by the contractors or from public funds.

Mrs. Rumbold: Any such costs would be met from public funds unless the disorder were attributable to the contractor's failure to carry out his duties under the contract properly.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances he will direct prison service employees into Wolds prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: Prison service staff may be required to go into Wolds prison as part of their normal duties in a variety of circumstances, ranging from the in-house presence of the controller to attendance in the event of a Crown servant being appointed as governor under section 88 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the director of Wolds prison has the power to refuse entry to any prisoner who has been duly remanded to it by the courts.

Mrs. Rumbold: The contract with Group 4 Remand Services Limited is for the management of a 320-place remand prison for category B prisoners. Subject to those limits on the number and category of prisoners to be held there, it will not be open to the director of the prison to refuse entry to any prisoner who has been duly remanded in custody by the courts.

Club Membership

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will propose amendments to the relevant legislation so as to exclude from the remit of the Commission for Racial Equality matters associated with club membership.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have no plans to amend the legislation in this way.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review that part of the British Nationality Act 1981 which removed the automatic right to British citizenship to any person born in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Charities

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those charities which are (a) exempt charities and (b) excepted charities.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 31 January 1992]: Exempt charities are those listed in the second schedule of the Charities Act 1960, as amended. They are:

The Universities of Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield, Bristol, Reading, Nottingham, Southampton, Hull, Exeter and Leicester;

There is no central record of charities excepted under section s.4(4)(c) of the 1960 Act, and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Maxwell Companies

Mr. Allason: To ask the Attorney-General if he will ask the Serious Fraud Office to extend its current investigations of Mirror Group Newspapers to include the piracy of computer software at Mirror Group Newspaper's headquarters.

The Attorney-General: No. The role of the SFO is to investigate and prosecute serious and complex fraud. Its current investigation into the affairs of Mirror Group Newspapers does not include any allegation of piracy of computer software and no material has been placed before the SFO which would justify extending its scope in the manner suggested by my hon. Friend.

PRIME MINISTER

Blindness

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister what action he proposes to undertake as a result of the findings of the Royal National Institute of the Blind survey into provisions for the blind and partially sighted.

The Prime Minister: I welcome the survey as a useful supplement to the information contained in earlier surveys of disability. Ministerial colleagues in the Departments of Health, of Social Security and of Employment have met or will shortly be meeting representatives of the Royal National Institute for the Blind to discuss the implications of the survey for their programmes. The survey is also being carefully considered in other departments with an interest.

Lamplugh School

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from Lamplugh school, Frizington, Cumbria; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Three representations were received during 1990.

Ehenside School

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from Ehenside school, Cleator moor; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, none.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands (Ultraviolet Light)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies Her Majesty's Government have carried out or commissioned regarding the possible effects of exposure to ultraviolet light on the wildlife and ecosystems in the Falklands and the waters surrounding them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Neither Her Majesty's Government nor the Falkland Islands Government have carried out, or commissioned, such studies.

Iraq (Nuclear Facilities)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 385, if he will identify any of those Iraqi nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards which were targeted and damaged by Allied bombing in Operation Granby/Desert Storm.

Mr. Garel-Jones: All the nuclear facilities declared to the IAEA for inspection purposes under Iraq's safeguards agreement with the agency were located at Tuwaitha, Baghdad. Tuwaitha has been visited on a number of occasions by the inspection teams, whose reports, which include details of bomb damage to the facilities concerned, are available in the House of Commons Library.

European Year of Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans his Department is making for the European year of elderly people and solidarity between the generations in 1993.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has the lead responsibility in this area, and I refer my hon. Friend to his reply. In drawing up plans for the European year, the Department of Health is consulting a wide range of national voluntary and professional bodies, statutory authorities and other relevant Government Departments.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a meeting with Dr. Anre Zagorsky of the Non-Proliferation Association of Moscow to discuss the physical and organisational security for nuclear weapons and warheads withdrawn from deployment in the commonwealth of independent states.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have no plans to do so. However, the United Kingdom technical mission which the Prime Minister announced after his meeting with President Yeltsin will be discussing these matters with the responsible authorities.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the strength of sensitive technologies and material export controls in (a) Russia and (b) the other republics of the former Soviet Union, since the establishment of the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The ability of Russia and the other republics of the former Soviet Union to maintain effective controls on the export of sensitive technologies and materials is a matter of continuing concern. We have raised this subject in our contacts with some of the states in question, and are in touch with our friends and allies to determine how best we can offer advice and assistance.

Iraq (United Nations Inspection)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the findings of the ninth special inspection team visit by International Atomic Energy Agency experts under the United Nations special commission to Iraq arrangements.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The final report of the ninth inspection visit by International Atomic Energy Agency experts to Iraq under the terms of Security Council resolution 687 has not yet been published. Once received it will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress achieved by the administration in the northern part of Somalia, known as the Republic of Somaliland, towards regional stability; and what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to provide development aid as well as humanitarian aid.

Mrs. Chalker: Northern Somalia has been more stable than the south since the fall of Siad Barre, although there are reports of some violent incidents in recent weeks. Our development aid programme to Somalia was closed in 1991. We have no present plans to reinstate it. We continue to provide aid in the north for projects which address both immediate humanitarian and rehabilitation needs.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Labour Costs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the prices of output is represented by the cost of labour.

Mr. Mellor: Labour costs in the forms of wages and salaries, income in kind and employers' contributions to social security and other social benefit arrangements averaged some 65 per cent. of the value at current factor cost of gross domestic product during the 10 years up to 1990. During the first three quarters of 1991 the figure was around 67 per cent.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the highest rate of VAT; what goods or services carried this rate; and between what dates it was in force.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The highest rate of VAT applied to goods and services was 25 per cent. It was introduced on 18 November 1974 when it applied only to petrol. On 1 May 1975 its scope was extended to cover domestic electrical appliances, radios, televisions, hi-fi equipment, pleasure boats and aircraft, towing caravans, photographic equipment, furs, jewellery and services associated with these goods. The higher rate was reduced to 12½ per cent. on 12 April 1976 and abolished on 18 June 1979.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue cost in 1992-93 and 1993-94 of raising the registration threshold for VAT to (a) £50,000 and (b) £52,000.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 31 January 1992]: The revenue cost of raising the VAT threshold to either £50,000 or £52,000 is estimated to be of the order of £150 million in a full year.

Royal Mint Advisory Committee

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who are the members of the Royal Mint Advisory Committee; when they were appointed; and what is their function.

Mr. Maples: The members of the Royal Mint Advisory Committee on the design of coins, medals, seals and decorations, and their dates of appointment are:

	Date
HRH The Prince Phillip, Duke of Edinburgh (President)	1952
Mr. A. D. Garrett (Deputy Master of the Mint) (Chairman)	1989
The Most Honourable the Marchioness of Anglesey	1991
Professor E. Arthur Bell	1992
Mr. N. D. Cadbury	1985
Sir Hugh Casson	1971
Dr. C. E. Challis	1991
Sir Colin Cole	1985
Mr. Vincent Duggleby	1985
Sir John Hale	1979
Mr. Michael A. Harvey	1991
Mr. Bryan Kneale	1992
Mr. John Porteous	1968
Miss Marina Warner	1985

The function of the Committee is to advise the Master of the Mint—the Chancellor of the Exchequer—on the selection of new designs, for coins, medals, seals and decorations.

Revenue Total

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cumulative amount of revenue received by the Exchequer since 1979, in 1991-92 prices, from (a) North sea oil, (b) privatisation and (c) council house sales.

Mr. Maples: The information on North sea revenues was given in reply to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 18 December 1991, Official Report, column 165, and the figures for privatisation proceeds can be found in table 1A.1 of the 1991 "Autumn Statement." Central Government have received no revenue from the sale of local authority housing.

Income Tax

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many self-employed people paid income tax in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and how many he estimates will pay income tax in 1992-93.

Mr. Maude: The number of taxpaying individuals whose main source of income is from self employment is estimated at about 2·8 million for each of these years assuming statutory indexation of allowances in 1992-93.

Nuclear Power Industry

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 388, he will outline the reasons underlying the decision to treat differently the financing arrangements of British Nuclear Fuels and Nuclear Electric.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 January 1992]: Nuclear Electric is classified to the public sector. Its requirement for external finance thus counts toward the public sector borrowing requirement. British Nuclear Fuels is classified to the company sector. Its requirement for finance will only count to the public sector borrowing requirement to the extent that it is met by lending or other forms of financial support from the public sector.

Cars (Employers' Payments)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what information he has on the total paid by employers to employees for car use both in the public and private sectors and the part thereof which is liable for tax;

(2) what information he has on the funds made available by employers to employees for the purchase of cars in any recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 31 January 1992]: Precise estimates are not available. Very approximate estimates based on survey information are that some £1 billion was paid in 1989-90 towards purchase, hire or running costs of cars used by about 2 million employees for business mileage. The taxable components of these payments cannot be separated from other taxable expense payments but are believed to be no more than £200 million.

Small Businesses

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from representatives of small businesses concerning the recent codes of practice issues by the four clearing banks.

Mr. Maples: None, although a number have commented publicly.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to assist Zimbabwe in response to the prolonged drought in parts of the country; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have offered to help Zimbabwe draw up a national water sector plan and to help Bulawayo, one of the areas hit hardest by the present drought, to manage its water supplies to maximum effect. We also have commitments of some £3 million in support, both directly and through non-governmental organisations, of work which addresses needs in drought-prone areas of the country. Projects include research into dryland cropping and small-scale irrigation techniques and funding of village-level water supply and improvement schemes. Other proposals are being considered.

Kenya

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current aid programme to Kenya.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1990, the last year for which figures are available, our gross bilateral aid programme, including Commonwealth Development Corporation disbursements of £2·2 million to Kenya, was £44 million.

Africa (Education Aid)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid in the field of education he will provide in 1992 for Nigeria, Ghana, Sierra Leone and The Gambia.

Mrs. Chalker: During 1992 we will continue our substantial educational and training programmes for these four countries, concentrating on in-service training for teachers, adult literacy, technical training and curriculum development. We are also maintaining our United Kingdom training programme for all four countries.

Know-how Fund

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds have been allocated to the know-how fund for eastern European countries; and if he will give details of the relevant countries and activities.

Mrs. Chalker: The know-how fund currently covers Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Romania —as well as the countries of the former Soviet Union. The total allocation up to the end of this financial year is some £48 million, for activities designed to promote the transition to a market economy and a plural democracy. Details of individual projects were placed in the Libraries of the House on 13 January 1992.

Russian Bankers and Financiers

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been allocated to the know-how fund for training of Russian bankers and financiers.

Mrs. Chalker: The know-how fund has already committed £158,000 to support training for bankers and financiers in Moscow and St Petersburg. Further projects are in preparation.

In addition, up to 1,000 Russians are to be given training in the banking and finance sector in Britain under an initiative which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer recently announced would be worth £8 million.

WALES

Part-ownership Schemes

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total cost to date of setting up, publicising and administering the flexi-ownership or rents into mortgage schemes in Wales; and how many tenants have so far acquired part-ownership of their homes under this scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Development Board for Rural Wales—(DBRW)—has dealt with 299 inquiries. To date, there have been 52 completed sales. About £10,000 was incurred by the Department and the DBRW in setting up the scheme and £14,000 on publicity. The DBRW has spent some £40,000 on administration costs.

Inmos Ltd

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sums of public money given in grants or loans to Inmos Ltd or SGS Thomson during the past five years.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has made regional development grant payments in respect of the Newport plants of Inmos Ltd, as follows:

25 March 1987	48,761
1 June 1988	78,469
15 June 1988	142,097
19 May 1988	24,007
25 November 1988	54,792
9 January 1989	27,174
27 January 1989	65,147

	£
16 February 1989	32,354
17 February 1989	29,759
10 May 1989	38,314
6 July 1989	44,108
17 October 1990	447,838

In addition, while there were no offers of regional selective assistance during this period, an instalment of £874,000 was paid on 21 December 1987 under the terms of an offer made in 1984.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost of ballots of parents held under section 61 of the Education Act 1988; for which schools he has required a fresh ballot to be held as a result of his guidance not being followed; and in each case what was the reason and who paid the cost of each ballot.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The total cost of ballots of parents held under the Education Reform Act is £8,720·47. No fresh ballots have been necessary.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what applications have been received from grant-maintained schools for special purpose grant-restructuring; and in each case (a) how many posts have been affected and (b) what grant has been paid.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Grant-maintained schools have been invited to apply for special purpose grant for restructuring. No claims have been received to date.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies have been distributed and, in each case, at what cost of all the editions of the booklets (a) "School Governors, How to Become a Grant-maintained School," (b) "Grant-maintained Schools, Questions Parents Ask" and (c) "Grant-maintained Schools, What it Means for Staff."

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

(a) 7,000 costing £4,770·35;
(b) 250 produced at minimal cost by the Department; and
(c) copies of the staff booklet will be distributed shortly.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for each of the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91, what have been the individual levels of (a) relief from liability for rates, (b) special purpose grant (VAT) and (c) annual maintenance grant for each grant-maintained school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There were no grant-maintained schools in Wales for the years in question.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what applications have been received from grant-maintained schools for capital grant and what has been the level of grant approved in each case; and what has been the average capital allocation per pupil in the grant-maintained sector and the average capital expenditure per pupil in the local education authority-maintained sector.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Grant-maintained schools in Wales have been invited to apply for capital grant. No applications have been received to date. In 1989-90, the latest date for which the information is available, the average capital expenditure per pupil in the local education authority maintained sector was £87.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been (a) the maximum possible and (b) the actual level of transitional grant in respect of each grant-maintained school; and for what purposes the approved expenditure was incurred.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The maximum amount available under the transitional grant arrangements is £60,000. Cwmcarn grant-maintained school and Bishop Vaughan Catholic comprehensive school are eligible to claim up to £39,900 and £57,300 respectively.

The grant is available to cover costs incurred by prospective governing bodies in preparing for grant-maintained status, such as advertising, office equipment, computers and administration.

Alcohol Officers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many county development officer posts have been (a) approved and (b) appointed in Wales, to date; and if he will list the counties or district health authority areas where a county development officer for alcohol services has been appointed and the date of first appointment in each case.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The provision of county development officer posts has been approved in every county in Wales. To date the only counties to make an appointment are Clwyd and Gwynedd, who made a joint appointment on 2 September 1991.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he decided to create or support the creation of county development officers for the co-ordination of alcohol services in Welsh counties.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The decision to create county development officer posts was taken following the submission for bids for financial support in 1991-92.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been (a) allocated and (b) granted by his Department to each county in Wales to fund county development officers for alcohol services in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Funding for county development officers was first provided in 1991-92 financial year. No fixed amount has been allocated to each county as they are pursuing differing arrangements, to meet specific local needs. A total of £28,812 has been allocated for the joint Clwyd/Gwynedd development officer appointment. Provisional allocation of £21,421, £24,700 and £11,452 have been made for development officers in Dyfed, Gwent and South Glamorgan respectively. Details of the other appointments have yet to be finalised. The funding is recurring for future years.

Agriculture Grants

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums were paid out by each of his divisional offices for each (a) agricultural subsidy and (b) grant scheme to farmers in (i) 1990 and (ii) 1991; and how many agreements were entered into for each grant scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	Financial Year 1989-90			Financial Year 1990-91

Art and Music

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has considered the representations on the proposals for art and music in the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend issued for consultation last August proposals for music and art in the national curriculum. The consultation period ended on 1 November last year. He has considered very carefully the representations which he has received and, in particular, the views of the Curriculum Council for Wales which has a statutory duty to advise him on matters relating to the national curriculum in Wales.

In the light of the council's advice and the representations he has received, he has published today for consultation draft orders with associated documents setting out attainment targets and programme of study for art and music in the nation curriculum for pupils aged five to 14, as he is required to do by section 21(3) of the Education Reform Act 1988. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

The period for consultation on the draft orders will end on 9 March. My right hon. Friend intends to make the final orders in April 1992 in good time for schools to begin teaching national curriculum art and music to pupils aged five, seven and 11 from the following autumn. The draft orders apply to Wales. My right hon. Friend has already published draft orders for England on 27 January.

Infant Deaths

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, columns 51-52, what pilot studies his Department is doing to test the feasibility of the proposals for the confidential inquiries into stillbirths and deaths in infancy set out in the report published on 2 July 1991; and whether the results of the pilot studies will be ready in time to be taken into account in finalising plans for the inquiries themselves.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 20 December 1991]: The working group on confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy, set up by the Chief Medical Officer of the Department of Health, gave advice about how the inquiry should proceed. That advice was based on experience gained from locally based enquiries and did not recommend pilot studies.

THE ARTS

London Theatres

33. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next expects to pay an official visit to a London theatre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: As Arts Minister, I am in the thoroughly enviable business of being able to combine business and pleasure, and regularly visit London theatres. I can assure my hon. Friend that I have every intention of continuing to enjoy this pleasurable state of affairs. In the last two weeks I have visited the King's Head theatre and the Almeida theatre in Islington.

Northern Theatres

34. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Arts which theatres he has visited in the north of England in the last 12 months.

Mr. Renton: I visited the northern region twice last year, when I saw some of the excellent arts organisations that are based in the northern region, including the Cleveland Arts Project, the Beamish Open Air museum and the Lang art gallery. I should be pleased to visit theatres when I am next in the region.

Art Treasure Thefts

37. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on actions by national museums and galleries in relation to stolen art treasures.

Mr. Renton: Our museums and galleries comply with a voluntary code of practice under which they agree not to acquire an object unless satisfied that it has not been acquired in, or exported from, its country of origin, or any intermediate country in which it may have been legally owned, in violation of that country's laws. This includes objects originating in the United Kingdom. I am not aware of any instances where this code of practice has been broken. However, we are currently considering, with our European Community partners, a draft directive from the Commission on the restitution of illegally exported cultural objects.

Artistic Heritage

38. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has had over measures to protect the United Kingdom's artistic heritage from export; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Following the reviewing committee's recent report to me, I have held discussions with the reviewing committee and with my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves), with the chairman of the National Art Collections Fund and with representatives of the Historic Houses Association. I have asked for representations on this important question to reach me by the end of March.

Museum Charges

Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the Government's policy on charges for museums.

Mr. Renton: Unlike the stated intentions of the Opposition I leave it to the national museums for which I am responsible to decide whether to charge for entry. Charging has added useful revenue to museum budgets which has enabled widely successful exhibitions to be mounted.

British Library

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will meet the chairman of the British library to discuss funding.

Mr. Renton: I regularly meet the chairman of the British library. Our discussions include the library's resources and other matters of interest to the board.

Works of Art (Export Licences)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his answer, on the subject of export licences for works of art, of 21 January, Official Report, columns 119-22, whether a drawing by Poussin was jointly acquired by the Ashmolean and Fitzwilliam museums as stated in the answer, or solely by the Ashmolean museum as stated in his Department's typescript communication to the hon. Member for Warley, East; and why the customary specification of the acquiring institution was omitted in the case of the refusal of an export licence in respect of a drawing of a wooded river landscape with fishermen in a boat by Pietro Berrettini da Cortona.

Mr. Renton: I can confirm that the drawing by Poussin, "A wooded landscape with low hills: a view of the Tiber", was acquired solely by the Ashmolean museum. An offer to purchase the drawing by Pietro Berrettini da Cortona, "A wooded river landscape with fishermen in a boat", was made by the British museum, at the recommended price, and was refused by the owner. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry took into account the existence of this valid offer to purchase, in refusing an export licence. The drawing continues to be held by the owner in the United Kingdom.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Investigations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current basis on which his Department calculate the fees to be paid to inspectors carrying out companies investigations; and what the total sums expended on such fees were in each year since 1985.

Mr. Redwood: In cases where non-departmental inspectors are appointed, fees, both for inspectors and for the grades of support staff assisting them, are calculated on the basis of pre-agreed hourly charge-out rates.

The total amount expended annually on such fees, including vouched disbursements, is shown in the companies annual report, copies of which are in the Library. For ease of reference, the table sets out the figures for each year since 1985:

Year	Expenditure (£ million)
1985	0·77
1986	1·29
1986-87	1·53
1987-88	2·50
1988-89	2·90

Year	Expenditure (£ million)
1989-90	6·10
1990-91	11·10

Note: Until 1986, the companies annual report was prepared on a calendar year basis. Thereafter, it was produced on a financial year basis. There is, therefore, an overlap in the figures provided for 1986 and for 1986-87 in the table.

Life Offices (Investors' Funds)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who bears the responsibility for investors' funds placed with intermediaries for investment in life offices; what agency regulates these transactions; and what representations he has received on this point.

Mr. Redwood: The holding of client money by investment businesses under the Financial Services Act is the subject of regulations which are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Breathing Apparatus

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what date he expects (a) to announce the setting up of approved inspection bodies to certify United Kingdom manufactured breathing apparatus to comply with the EC directive under article 100A and (b) to publish draft regulations for consultation.

Mr. Leigh: There is nothing that I can usefully add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 24 January 1992, Official Report, column 400.

Romania

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance is currently made available by his Department specifically to assist British companies to obtain and fulfil contracts to supply goods and services to Romania.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 30 January 1992]: A range of services is available under the enterprise initiative including support for outward missions and participation in overseas trade fairs, general information on the markets and answers to specific questions about market opportunities. The services are available through the Romanian section of my Department or our network of regional offices.

Export Credits Guarantee Department cover is not available for medium-term business—that is, on credit terms of two years or more—for Romania, but the position is currently under review.

Short-term cover is available from the private sector.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement of the reasons why Export Credits Guarantee Department cover is not available for British exports to Romania.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 30 January 1992] The availability of ECGD medium-term export credit cover is dependent on assessment of a country's capacity to repay its debts. Romania's International Monetary Fund programme identifies a significant financing gap in the country's balance of payments. The EC has agreed to fund 50 per cent. of this gap but, thus far, the aggregate amount pledged by other donor countries has fallen well short of the remaining 50 per cent.

There have also been a number of very significant changes in the economic and political situation in Romania during the last year. These have also had to be taken into account in deciding whether to resume cover.

Now that the position is becoming clearer and more international support for Romania's balance of payments is becoming available the provision of ECGD cover is under active review.

Mr. Nicholson Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the size of contracts available to British exporters wishing to supply goods and services to Romania.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 30 January 1992]:] Information on which to base a comprehensive assessment is not available.

Patents Office

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to issue new guidelines to the Patents Office to assist in the screening of applications to foreign patent offices for information prejudicial to the safety of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 January 1992]: I have no plans to issue new guidelines to the Patents Office. There are long-established procedures for screening applications which may have a bearing on the defence of the realm and the comptroller of the office is also required under the Patents Act 1977 to have regard to issues of public safety.

CIVIL SERVICE

Scottish Graduates

43. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will carry out a survey into the proportion of graduates of Scottish universities recruited into the higher grades of the civil service.

Mr. Renton: No. All recruitment to the civil service is on merit on the basis of fair and open competition.

Unions (Ministerial Meetings)

45. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what meetings he has had so far this year with union representatives from London branches of the civil service unions.

Mr. Renton: I meet representatives from civil service trade unions from time to time to discuss a variety of issues.

Senior Civil Servants

47. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will consider the establishment of a system for civil servants to appear before appropriate Committees of the House of Commons, prior to their confirmation in a senior civil service post.

Mr. Renton: No. The present arrangements for appointment on merit are efficient, impartial, well tried and have commanded the support of all parties over many years. I see no reason to change to a system of Committee hearings which has not been conspicuously successful elsewhere.

Civil Service Morale

48. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what new initiatives he has to improve morale in the civil service.

Mr. Renton: Our aim is to have an efficient, effective and well-motivated civil service. Managers in Departments and agencies continually work to achieve this.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Management Costs

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage has been attributed to management costs of the funds spent in each of the last five years by (a) each of the education and library boards, (b) each of the health and social services boards and (c) the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

Terrorism

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table indicating the total number of deaths due to terrorism that have occurred between 1968 and the present day in Northern Ireland; and if he will give the figures available to him for those killed outside Northern Ireland as a result of the Province's security situation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available on deaths resulting from the security situation in Northern Ireland is set out in the table:

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table indicating the number of injuries due to terrorism that have occurred between 1968 and the present day in Northern Ireland; and if he will give the figures available to him for those injured outside Northern Ireland as a result of the Province's security situation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table provides the information available about the numbers of injuries caused to persons in Northern Ireland, Great Britain and the rest of Europe, excluding the Republic of Ireland, which are believed to be associated with the security situation in Northern Ireland. Such information is not available in respect of the Republic of Ireland.

Redundancies, South Down

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many redundancies in factories in Ballynahinch and Killyleagh have been reported in the last year; and what plans he has to introduce enterprise zones into the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Economic Development receives notification of redundancies involving 10 or more employees at any specific establishment. Since 1 January 1991, a total of 226 redundancies have been reported at factories located in Ballynahinch and Killyleagh.

In association with the International Fund for Ireland the Government are embarking on a number of initiatives aimed at enhancing social and economic conditions in South Down. Enterprise zones which are targeted on areas of large scale industrial dereliction do not form part of this regeneration strategy.

Environmental Pollution

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met (a) senior industrialists, (b) the Director of the Confederation of British Industry, and (c) leaders of the trade union movement to discuss measures to reduce environmental pollution in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet a wide range of people connected with industry in Northern Ireland and environmental issues are often discussed. There have not, however, been any meetings specifically to examine measures to reduce pollution.

Fair Employment Commission

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the number of (a) Protestants and (b) Roman Catholics in the Fair Employment Commission staff, at the latest available date, for staff in (i) executive posts, (ii) operations posts and (iii) support posts.

Mr. Needham: The information requested, as at 1 January 1992, is as follows:

	Protestant	Roman Catholic
Operational staff	23	19
Support staff	8	10

Further disaggregation of the data could infringe the confidentiality provisions of fair employment legislation by disclosing the religious belief of indentifiable individuals.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current length of time taken to process attendance allowance application forms; and what action will be taken to reduce the time.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Supplementary Benefit Appeals

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional arrangements will be made urgently to resolve the number of outstanding appeals in respect of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Hanley: Within the last few months there have been around 22,000 appeals against the award of supplementary benefit, all of them made outside the normal time limit for appeal. The president of the Independent Appeal Tribunal Service is responsible for hearing appeals and he has made arrangements to have them passed to the chairmen for independent ajudication at additional sessions.

Nursery Care

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide an estimate of the money spent by education and library boards in Northern Ireland in 1990-91 and 1991-92 on providing education and nursery care for three and four-year-olds.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

	1990-91 (outturn)	1991-92[1] (estimate)
	£000s	£000s
Nursery Schools	2,922	6,901

[1] 1991-92 figures include estimated expenditure on teachers' salaries; in 1990-91 these costs were met by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland.

Expenditure on nursery classes in primary schools is included in primary schools expenditure and is not available separately.

Life Sentences

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners were serving (a) discretionary life sentences and (b) mandatory life sentences as of 31 December, specifying the numbers of prisoners in each category who had served more than 10 years by that date and the length of time in excess of 10 years served by any such prisoners.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers which I gave to the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) on 29 January, Official Report, columns 607-8.

Executive Agencies

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will announce any further progress under the "next steps" initiative in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am pleased to announce that, following a thorough feasibility study, the Government have decided that an executive agency should be set up within the Department of Finance and Personnel to carry out the work of the Valuation and Lands Office.

The detailed planning for agency status is already under way and the target launch date is 1 April 1993.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Workers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the disabled work force hold professional or managerial positions compared with the percentage for non-disabled workers.

Mr. Jackson: I regret that this information is not available.

Youth Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average unit price in real terms of a place on youth training in 1983 and what it is now.

Mr. Jackson: The average unit price of a youth training scheme place in 1983 was £88 per trainee per week at current price levels. The average unit price of a youth training place is £51 per trainee week in 1991-92. The reduction in the unit price reflects the increased level of financial contributions from employers and also the Government's determination to obtain best value for taxpayers' money.

Civil Unrest (Compensation)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people claiming compensation under the scheme of compensation for loss of employment through civil unrest were refused compensation in each year since 1970 because they had not been employed for more than two years; and what percentage they represent of (a) the number claiming compensation and (b) the number of those workers whose claims were disallowed.

Mr. Needham: It is only possible to provide the information requested from 1987 as relevant records prior to that year have not been retained. The available information is given in the table.

Number of applications disallowed because applicants had not been employed for more than two years	4	—	3	3	1
Expressed as a percentage of applications received	13	—	11	19	7
Expressed as a percentage of total applications disallowed	50	—	38	60	50

Unemployment

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people became unemployed during 1991 in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: In the 12 months ending December 1991, 4,423,260 people became claimant unemployed, compared to 3,721,914 who left unemployment, leading to a net rise of 701,346 over the year, on the unadjusted basis.

The flow figures will include some people who had more than one spell of unemployment during the year.

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training will be given to disablement resettlement officers to enable them to advise individual claimants about their entitlement to disability working allowance and its impact on their finances.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the policy of Employment Service agencies in respect of acting in competition with the private recruitment sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have long been a strong supporter of the private recruitment sector. This sector has a distinctive and important role to play, and there should not be any unfair competition from the public employment service.

Employment Service

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the main aims and objectives of the Employment Service.

Mr. Jackson: The aims and objectives of the Employment Service are set out in the Employment Service agency framework document, a copy of which can be found in the Library.

Jobcentres

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department has taken to ensure that jobcentres build up sufficient caseloads of clients' skills to facilitate the matching of the unemployed to appropriate vacancies; what priority is accorded to matching in his Department's activities in helping unemployed people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if it is the intention of the Government to level out prices in order to bring about a fixed unit price for training and enterprise councils nationwide; and what consideration he has given to the variation across the United Kingdom in terms of (a) the level of employed status, (b) the number of clients with special needs, (c) the difference in the rate of unemployment and (d) the differences in the availability of work employment placements.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have no intention of bringing about a fixed unit price for training and enterprise councils nationwide. Unit prices for training and enterprise councils take account of local variations in their labour markets, including the factors listed by the hon. Member.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what basis he decided to encourage an increase in the number of national vocational qualifications to meet the CBI targets and other quality measures without making a corresponding increase in the funding of TECS.

Mr. Jackson: Our priority is to encourage the development of the highly skilled and flexible work force the economy needs. On the Government's behalf, we have therefore welcomed the CBI's targets, since they are based on nationally recognised qualifications and have been set by employers, who have the main responsibility for taking action to achieve them. We have also invited TECs to take the lead in their local communities in promoting action by employers and others to work towards the targets. TECs will be given the funding to do the tasks the Government have asked them to do.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to fund the training of new people entering the employment register within the lower total budget available to training and enterprise councils for 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson: Planned spending on YT and ET in 1992-93 will increase. In addition, resources for a range of measures delivered by the Employment Service for unemployed people have also been increased. Detailed figures will be published shortly in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1991-1992 to 1992-1994" for the Employment Department group.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to increse the money within TECs' training budgets.

Mr. Jackson: The Department is currently negotiating business plans for 1992-93 with all TECs. The Government plan to spend £2·8 billion on training, enterprise and vocational education programmes this year, which is more than was spent last year.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the budget for all the TECs in the United Kingdom for the years (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson: The table shows the TEC operational budgets for 1991-92. Information for Scottish local enterprise companies is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to provide. Budgets are for the period of TEC operation only and vary in the periods they cover because of the differing operational dates of TECs.

The TEC budgets for 1992-93 are still subject to negotiation.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department uses business plans prepared by local TECs.

Mr. Jackson: The business plan sets out the TEC's planned activity for the year ahead. It forms the basis of any negotiations with the TEC on matters such as levels of resources. The approved business plan represents what the TEC agrees to deliver under its contract with us.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will remove restrictions imposed within the operating agreement for local training and enterprise councils which meet the needs of their own areas.

Mr. Jackson: We are satisfied that the operating agreement with training and enterprise councils gives them the flexibility to arrange provision to meet the specific needs of their local areas.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to transferring the remit of training and enterprise councils back to his Department.

Mr. Jackson: We are very satisfied with the way TECs are discharging their training and enterprise remit, and have no plans to transfer their responsibilities back to the Department.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what priority he gives to the business plan of local training and enterprise councils as compared with other main programmes for the unemployed.

Mr. Jackson: The activities set out in the training and enterprise councils' business plans are an important part of the wide range of help given to unemployed people through the Department.

Training

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the average unit cost for (a) youth training and (b) employment training and the expected monetary contribution towards this from employers both for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson: In 1991-92, the average cost per filled place per annum is £[illegible] for YT and £6,100 for ET, including allowances. We are not able to make the 1992-93 figures public until negotiations between the Employment Department, and TECs for 1992-93 contracts are complete, as to do so would prejudice the Department's negotiating position.

Employer contributions are estimated to be £627 per filled place per annum on YT and £420 per filled place per annum on ET in 1991-92. We expect an increase in employer contributions in 1992-93.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what reasons it was decided not to pay trainee allowance out of employment training but to include an allowance of £35 per week in the youth training unit price.

Mr. Jackson: Youth training must receive training allowances of at least £29·50 per week and £35 per week for 16 and 17-year-old trainees respectively. These allowances are paid directly to trainees by training providers from the funding available from training and enterprise councils.

Employment training trainees receive their previous benefit entitlement plus a £10 premium. Due to the direct link with benefit, employment training trainees are paid their training allowance by the Employment Service through the benefit payment computer system. It is therefore not necessary to include allowances in the employment training funding given to training and enterprise councils and providers.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy in this year's round of negotiation on reducing the youth training price to a figure below that of employment training.

Mr. Jackson: The prices paid to training and enterprise councils for youth training and employment training are set independently of each other and reflect among other things the differing nature of the programmes.

Local Initiative Fund

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what reasons the local initiative was reduced from £1·15 per capita to £0·45.

Mr. Jackson: The per capita allowance is just one element of money made available to training and enterprise councils through the local initiative fund. The total amount available for training and enterprise councils to spend through the fund in 1992-93 will be higher than their expected expenditure in 1991-92.

TRANSPORT

Cradlewell Bypass

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the reasons for the postponement of the Cradlewell bypass project by his transport policies and plans Department in its settlement with the city of Newcastle upon Tyne; when the new date for a commencement of his project is planned; and whether the public safety implications of a consequential further postponement of the renovation of the listed Armstrong bridge across Jesmond dene have been taken into account.

Mr. Chope: The start date for Cradlewell bypass is a matter for the Newcastle city council.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicle owners in 1991 renewed road tax on those vehicles after a period during which the vehicle was alleged to have been off the road.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Most breaks in licensing occur because the vehicle is in the hands of a dealer for sale.

Railway Services (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held during the past 12 months with his EC counterparts with a view to upgrading railway services through Wales, as part of his transport infrastructure links between Ireland and the rest of Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I last discussed these issues with the Irish Minister of Transport and Tourism, Mr. Lyons, on 6 July 1991. At last December's EC Council of Ministers, the Commission tabled a paper on European transport infrastructure networks, which will be the subject of future discussions between member states.

Electrically Powered Passenger Road Vehicles

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring he undertakes of advances in the development of electrically powered passenger road vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My Department's Transport and Road Research Laboratory is currently reviewing national and international research and experience in the use of alternative fuels and engines for road vehicles. This review will encompass electric vehicles and battery technology.

In addition to the TRRL review, my Department continues to keep abreast of electric vehicle developments worldwide, and I welcome the continuing efforts by manufacturers to develop advanced batteries and more competitive electric vehicles.

Disabled People (Parking)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will initiate discussions with representatives of the London boroughs association and other relevant bodies to examine the provision of increased parking spaces for registered disabled persons in the outer London boroughs.

Mr. Chope: No. But I shall ensure that a reference to this is included in the forthcoming parking guidance being issued under the Road Traffic Act 1991. This guidance will be subject to consultation with London local authorities.

Offshore Standby Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many emergency or standby vessels working in the offshore oil and gas industries have failed their inspections in each of the past five years; how many of those deemed unsatisfactory were removed from this work in each of the past five years; what other sanctions were imposed upon the owners of such vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Annual surveys of standby vessels are carried out by the Department's marine surveyors to establish that the vessel satisfies the Merchant Shipping Regulations and the specific standards required by the standby vessel code. All defects and items of non-compliance are brought to the attention of the shipowners together with details of what repairs/modifications are required before a certificate of survey can be issued. Owners may withdraw vessels if the cost of repairs or modifications renders the further use of the vessel uneconomic.

Details of the number of vessels withdrawn by their owners in each of the past five years are not available to the Department.

Other sanctions which have been applied to standby vessels include withdrawal of certificates pending repair, and delay to vessels until repairs are completed and approved by the surveyor.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the frequency and duration of inspections of standby vessels operating in the offshore oil and gas industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Standby safety vessels operating in the offshore oil and gas industries are subject to annual surveys under Merchant Shipping Regulations and for reissue of the certificate of compliance with the "Code for the Assessment of the Suitability of Standby Vessels Attending Offshore Installations". This is the non-statutory document which sets out guidance on the standards to be achieved and equipment to be carried on such vessels.

The duration of such surveys depends upon the condition of the vessel when presented for survey and the extent and type of any defects discovered during the survey.

Such vessels may also be subjected to random inspections during the currency of their certificates.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (a) types, (b) ages and (c) names of emergency or standby vessels currently working in the offshore oil and gas industries.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is as follows:

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new vessels have been introduced into the United Kingdom emergency or standby vessels operating in the offshore oil and gas industries in each of the past three years; how many of these vessels are (a) converted vessels or (b) custom-built emergency or standby vessels; and how many of the custom-built vessels were built in United Kindom yards.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of vessels certificated for the first time for use in the United Kingdom standby industry in the past three years were eight vessels in 1989, 24 in 1990 and 30 in 1991.

Of these vessels the vast majority, some 61 vessels, were converted for the purpose. Only one was purpose built as a standby vessel and this may not have been directly for the United Kingdom industry but may have previously served as a standby vessel in Norway or elsewhere. No custom-built vessels were constructed in united Kingdom shipyards.

Yachts

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consult the hon. Member for South Hams before he decides on (a) a timescale for the implementation of further revisions of the Merchant Shipping (Pleasure Yacht) Regulations 1991 and (b) a code of practice for charter yachts.

Mr. McLoughlin: Yes.

Air Routes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it a condition of granting regulatory approval of the purchase by W. S. Air Inc. of the Philadelphia/London and Baltimore/London routes from Trans World Airlines Inc. that all employees allocated to these routes will be offered transfer terms.

Mr. McLoughlin: The designation of one airline on a route in substitution for another is a matter for the Government of the country concerned, in this case, the United States. Employment arrangements are matters for the companies concerned and their employees, subject to any relevant rules regarding employment protection and transfer which apply under United Kingdom law. They are not matters on which I intervene.

M6

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of plans to widen the M6; when he expects the public consultation process to begin; and when he expects to be able to make a decision.

Mr. Chope: Preparation work is proceeding satisfactorily; public consultation on proposals for the length between junctions 11 and 20 is planned for later this year.

Red Route Network

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he used in deciding which roads to include in his draft red route network.

Mr. Chope: The main basis for the proposed red route network is the present primary route network with the addition of certain other strategically important roads and a limited network of roads in central London identified as being most important for the movement of traffic within the area.

Vehicle Emissions

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision he makes for the reporting of smoky emissions from on-road buses and for allowing such vehicles to be called in for immediate testing.

Mr. McLoughlin: Complaints to the Department's traffic area offices about smoky buses are followed up, if sufficient details of the vehicle and the incident are provided, by a letter to the operator. This asks him to have the vehicle checked and to report to the Department on the action taken. If there are persistent complaints about a particular operator or vehicle, the vehicle inspectorate will arrange to visit his premises. This could result in a vehicle being prohibited from use until a defect was rectified.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what current procedures exist for the testing of exhaust emissions of bus fleets.

Mr. McLoughlin: Bus operators are responsible for ensuring that their vehicles comply with the emissions provisions in the Construction and Use Regulations. The density of diesel smoke from buses is checked visually by the vehicle inspectorate at annual roadworthiness tests and also at spot checks at the roadside and at operators' premises.

Policy Unit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the establishment of his transport policy unit in each of the last three years; what are its responsibilities; and if he will list the deregulation initiatives taken.

Mr. Freeman: The staff complement for the transport policy unit was 7½ posts in 1989, 9½ in 1990 and 14 in 1991.

The unit's responsibilities are the co-ordination of cross-modal transport policy issues, especially concerning the environment and safety. Since 1991 it has also had responsibility for deregulation in transport; for liaison with parliamentary Select Committees and for co-ordination of the Department's interests in the legislative programme.

The Government's deregulation initiative was started in 1985, and the areas targeted for review in each Government Department including DTp were set out in the White Paper "Lifting the Burden," Cmnd 9571. Progress with that programme, and subsequent additions to the programme, were set out in "Building Businesses ... not Barriers", Cmnd 9794, published May 1986, and "Releasing Enterprise", Cmnd 512, published November 1988. The programme for 1991 was announced to the House by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Corporate Affairs on 18 December 1990, Official Report, columns 99-100.

The aim of the deregulation initiative is to remove the unnecessary regulation and licensing of business. The Government have, however, no hesitation in retaining or making new regulations where these are needed particularly for safety reasons. For example we are seeking agreement in the EC for improvements in regulatory standards for the safe construction of vehicles. The Department's aim is to review all existing regulations, to ensure that these are not out of date, or overlapping, or so obscure as to be ineffective—and where they are, to abolish them; and, if new regulations are necessary, to make them as unburdensome as possible.

London Underground (Danger Lights)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest position concerning London Underground and the railways inspectorate's report on procedures at danger lights.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that this matter will be addressed in a report to be published within the next few weeks by the Health and Safety Executive on the railway inspectorate's inquiries into two separate accidents involving London Underground trains.

British Rail

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning British Rail's proposed reduction of services on the west coast main line; and what plans he has to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss these reductions.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has received a number of representations. The level of service on any particular line is a matter for British Rail.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Statements of Attainment

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which level 6 statements of attainment in GCSE English reading and writing he proposes to forgo to reduce the coursework weighting.

Mr. Eggar: The limits on coursework in GCSE English which my right hon. and learned Friend announced in November allow for up to 20 per cent. of the total marks to be based on coursework in reading and writing combined. Within that it should be possible for the examining groups to devise ways of testing skills, knowledge and understanding across the full range of statements of attainment. It is not necessary that each and every statement of attainment be the subject of examination.

European Year of Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans his Department is making for the European year of elderly people and solidarity between the generations in 1993.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has lead responsibility in this area, in conjunction with the Department of Social Security, and I refer my hon. Friend to his reply today. In drawing up plans for the European year, the Department of Health is consulting a wide range of national voluntary and professional bodies, statutory authorities and other relevant Government Departments.

School Pupils

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in rank order the English local education authorities showing (a) expenditure per secondary school pupil and (b) the proportion of pupils achieving five GCSEs at grade A to C for the most recent year available.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows school-based spending per secondary pupil in financial year 1989-90 and the average percentage of school leavers obtaining five or more grades A, B or C at GCSE in 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Note: "Per pupil expenditure figures are derived from LEAs' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and their pupil numbers to the Department of Education and Science. Figures are for 1989-90, the latest year for which actual spending information is available; 'n/a' indicates that a return was not received from the authority. Net institutional expenditure covers spending on salaries and wages, recurrent premises costs, books and equipment, and certain other supplies and services. It excludes spending on LEA administration, home to school transport, school meals and financing costs of capital expenditure."

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in rank order, by local education authority, the proportion of 16 and 17-year-olds staying on at school or going into full-time education.

Mr. Eggar: Data for 1989-90 were published last year and are available in the Library. Participation rates for 1990-91 will appear in a statistical bulletin in May. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of 16 and 17-year-olds in Derbyshire (a) stayed on at school, (b) went into other full-time education or (c) received some form of part-time education in 1979, 1986 and the most recent year available.

Mr. Eggar: Participation rates for 16 and 17-year-olds in Derbyshire who stayed on at school or in other full-time and part-time education in 1979, 1986 and 1989 are as follows:

	Percentage of population

Truancy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how may categories of absence are set out in the regulations on reporting on truancy; and what pilot survey was carried out of the costs and benefits of requiring these categories.

Mr. Fallon: The Education (Pupils' Attendance Records) Regulations 1991 improve the data on truancy by requiring schools to categorise pupils' absence in one of two ways: authorised or unauthorised. The additional costs of doing this are limited, since schools should already have been enquiring into reasons for absence. The draft regulations and explanatory circular were sent in advance as consultation documents to local education authorities and other bodies concerned.

Council for National Academic Awards

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what external legal advice his Department has received on the contractual status between the Council for National Academic Awards and students currently registered with that body who will not complete their courses or programmes of research until after September 1992.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is not the usual practice of the Department to disclose whether it has received legal advice. My right hon. and learned Friend accepts that it will be essential for alternative arrangements to be made for students presently registered with the Council for National Academic Awards, but who will not complete their courses until after September 1992. As indicated in his answer on 16 December, Official Report, columns 31-33, he is satisfied that the necessary arrangements are capable of being made within the planned timetable.

Validation Fees

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the maximum validation fee which may be charged under the present regulations for both polytechnics and universities; and what is the maximum fee proposed under arrangements for the future.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The maximum recommended fee for university validation of college courses in the academic year 1991-92 is £340. The Department will be consulting the Committee of Vic-Chancellors and Principals shortly about the fee for 1992-93 in respect of existing validation services. We believe that the current level may not allow for economies of scale as numbers of students have increased in recent years. In the case of new or existing degree awarding institutions offering validation services to other colleges for courses currently validated by the Council for National Academic Awards, the Department has requested estimates of the costs involved and the fee to be charged by the end of May. An analysis of the full costs associated with CNAA validation suggests that institutions offering validation on the same basis might be expected to offer a service at a fee ranging from under £150 to over £250, depending on the number of institutions, courses and students involved. The education departments will notify in June a maximum fee for validation services for 1992-93 in respect of students starring relevant courses in that academic year.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what have been the individual levels of (a) relief from liability for rates, (b) special purpose grant—VAT—and — annual maintenance grant for each grant-maintained school for each of the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is set out in the tables.

[1] Applications have been received from these three schools and are still under consideration.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which grant-maintained schools have made an application for a change of character; and, in each case, (a) what was the proposed change and (b) whether the proposed change has been approved.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is set out in the table.

School	Date of publication	Nature of proposed change	Outcome
Skegness Grammar School	1 November 1989	Addition of boarding provision	Approved 31 October 1990
Chalvedon School	5 June 1991	Change in age range from 11-16 to 11-18	Approved 27 August 1991
Castle Hall School	8 November 1991	Change in age range from 9-13 to 11-18; introduction of selective admissions arrangements; significant enlargement	Under consideration
The Cornwallis School	15 November 1991	Change in age range from 11-17 to 11-18	Under consideration
St. John the Baptist School	21 November 1991	Change in age range from 12-18 to 11-18	Under consideration
Hardley School	2 January 1992	Change in age range from 12-16 to 11-16	Under consideration
The King's School, Grantham	10 January 1992	Significant enlargement	Under consideration
Highams Park School	14 January 1992	Change in age range from 11-16 to 11-18	Under consideration
Avon Valley School	17 January 1992	Change in age range from 12-16 to 11-16; introduction of 50 selective places	Under consideration

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the proposed arrangements for the calculation of annual maintenance grant for grant-maintained schools for 1992-93; if he will make copies of the responses available; and whether the proposals are to be amended in the light of the responses received.

Mr. Eggar: We received some 60 responses to the consultation paper issued on 17 October last year, the majority from local education authorities and grant-maintained schools. We have not published the responses to previous consultations on annual maintenance grant and do not intend to do so this year. In reaching final decisions my right hon. and learned Friend considered carefully the responses submitted. As he announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 22 January Official Report, colums 245-46, my right hon. and learned Friend has decided, subject to one technical change, to confirm the proposals set out in the consultation paper.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which grant-maintained schools have been visited by Her Majesty's inspectors; in each case (a) by how many inspectors, (b) for how long and (c) at what cost; and whether it is proposed to publish any report arising from these visits.

Mr. Eggar: At the end of December 1991, there were 102 schools operating under GM status and HMI had visited 66 of them. The table gives details of the visits made to each school.

In all cases the inspector's findings were reported orally to the head, the chairman of governors where he or she was able to attend. None of these inspections was planned to lead to a published report. My right hon. and learned Friend will therefore not be publishing the findings of these individual school inspections.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many copies have been distributed and, in each case, at what cost of all the editions of the booklets (a) "School Governors, How to Become a Grant-Maintained School", (b) "Grant-Maintained Schools—Questions Parents Ask", (c) "Grant-Maintained Schools—What it Means for Staff" and (d) "Grant-Maintained Schools—Experiences During the First Year".

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is given in the table.

[1] The costs recorded in the table include the costs of initial printing, revisions and reprints and postage cost of block distribution where recorded separately. Postage costs of ad hoc distributions are not available.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science for each of the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 (a) what applications have been received from grant-maintained schools for capital grant and what has been the level of grant approved in each case and (b) what has been the average capital allocation per pupil in the grant-maintained sector and the average capital expenditure per pupil in the local education authority-maintained sector.

Mr. Eggar: The tables for each of the years requested list the applications received for named projects and the allocations made. The table for 1992-93 does not include bids recently received from newly approved schools which will be considered in due course. In addition to the named project allocations, each grant-maintained school is eligible to claim a formula allocation of capital grant calculated by reference to pupil numbers. The formula for each of the years is as follows.

1990-91—£13,000 per school plus £6 per pupil
1991-92—£19,000 per school plus £9 per pupil
1992-93—£10,000 per school plus £20 per pupil.

The average capital expenditure per pupil at grant-maintained schools in 1990-91 was £181. Numbers of pupils in grant-maintained schools rise during the year as more schools become incorporated. In 1991-92 the average capital expenditure per pupil at the beginning of the year was £231. By the end of the year the average per pupil expenditure is likely to be around £100. Figures for 1992-93 will depend upon the total number of pupils in the sector.

1990-91	103
1991-92	109

Notes: The figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 for the LEA schools are forecast outturn. The 1992-93 figure is an estimate based on pupil number projections and expenditure levels assumed in the 1991 Autumn Statement.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the cost of ballots of parents held under section 61 of the Education Act 1988; for which schools he has required a fresh ballot to be held as a result of his guidance not being followed; and, in each case, what was the reason and who paid the cost of each ballot.

Mr. Eggar: The total cost of ballots up to 31 December 1991 is £349,421·48. A fresh ballot has had to be held at two schools. In the case of both Edenbridge middle school in Kent LEA and Deighton high school in Kirklees LEA, there were significant errors in the compilation of the electoral roll.

In both cases the costs of the ballots were met by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been (a) the maximum possible and (b) the actual level of transitional grant in respect of each grant-maintained school; and for what purposes the approved expenditure was incurred.

Mr. Eggar: Transitional grant is paid for extra management and other expenditure incurred in the course of changing over to grant-maintained status. The maximum transitional grant allocation and the amount actually claimed and paid to date in the case of each grant-maintained school or school approved for grant-maintained status are as follows:

Nursery Education

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide an estimate of the money spent by local education authorities in England and Wales in 1990-91 and 1991-92 on providing education and nursery care for three and four year-olds.

Mr. Eggar: Responsibility for education and day care in Wales rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and for day care in England with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. My Department's estimates of recurrent expenditure by local education authorities in England on education for the under fives are £685 million in 1990-91 and £776 million in 1991-92.

Schools Branch 4

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the functional responsibilities of and number of staff employed in schools branch 4, division B, at his Department; and what was the cost of this branch in 1990-91, the estimated cost for 1991-92 and the budgeted cost for 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: There are currently 53 staff working in this division which is responsible for policy on grant maintained schools, including transitional arrangements and recurrent and capital funding. The running costs of this division in 1990-91 were approximately £372,000. Estimated outturn in 1991-92 is some £700,000. Budgets for 1992-93 have not yet been set.

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of teachers, and at which grades, earn more than £20,280 a year.

Mr. Fallon: Approximately 124,000 teachers, representing one third of the teaching force in primary and secondary schools in England and Wales, are currently paid more than £20,280 per annum. Of these, some 28,000 are head teachers, 31,000 are deputy head teachers and 65,000 are classroom teachers who are paid on the standard scale and hold an incentive allowance.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of school sixth forms with (a) fewer than 50 students and (b) between 50 and 100 students and (c) more than 100 students.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows the number of maintained schools and CTCs with sixth forms in England in January 1991 in each of the categories requested.

Number of Students	Number of Schools
49 and fewer	246
50—100	482
101 and more	1,274

Further Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish details of the formula to be used to determine the level of resources to be redistributed from local education authorities to the Further Education Funding Council under the provisions of the Further and Higher Education Bill [Lords].

Mr. Eggar: The Government are considering the level of resources to be transferred from revenue support grant to reflect the shift in responsibilities from local education authorities to the Further Education Funding Council from 1 April 1993. We shall be consulting the local authority associations on proposals for the annual local authority finance settlement for 1993-94 in due course.

Voluntary Aided Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list any additional financial support for local education authorities to fund in 1992-93 minor works projects of more than £120,000 for voluntary aided schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The total amount of resources allocated in 1992-93 for minor works within the new range—£5,000 to £250,000—is £21 million. This compares with an allocation in 1991-92 of £6·7 million for minor works and £1·5 in respect of named major projects costing between £120,000 and £250,000.

Funds for minor works improvement projects are allocated to each local education authority and it is for them to determine which projects should be authorised. The Department has not prescribed the level of funds to be assigned to minor works projects costing more than £120,000.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Beds

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds were available in each health board area (a) in total and (b) for the care of the elderly, on 1 January; and what are the projected equivalent figures for April 1992.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available information is shown in the table. Projected figures are not centrally available.

NHS hospitals—in Scotland; average available staffed beds[1]; all specialties and care of the elderly; by health board; quarter ending 30 September 1991

[3] Geriatric assessment, geriatric long stay and phychogeriatrics.

Children (Special Needs)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children have had their record of special needs reviewed (a) in total and (b) under the statutory procedures, by the Greater Glasgow health board in each year since 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is the responsibility of education authorities to keep under consideration the record of needs of all children and young persons in their area and to review their decision to open these records and the information entered on them whenever they consider it expedient to do so, or at the request of a parent of young person. Greater Glasgow health board has no statutory obligations in this connection.

A record of the number of reviews of records of needs undertaken by education authorities is not held centrally.

Young Offenders

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by name and by prison those young people since 1972 who have been detained without limit of time.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1992]: The total number currently detained is 40, of whom nine are in young offenders institutions and 31 in prisons.

If the hon. Member requires the names and establishments of those currently detained, I shall be happy to write to him.

Under-fives

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the figures for 1991 for the percentage of under-fives in (a) nursery schools, (b) nursery classes, (c) infant classes and (d) in total, by local education authority in Scotland, in rank order.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 31 January 1992]: Provisional information from the 1991 school census on the number and percentage of pupils in nursery schools and departments in Scotland is as follows. The school census does not collect a separate breakdown of pupils into nursery schools, nursery classes and infant classes.

Pupils in Education Authority Nursery Schools/Departments at September 1991 by Education Authority Area as a percentage of the estimated three and four-year-old age group

Pressure Stock Licences

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of pressure stock licences attaching to fishing vessels in each port of registration (a) at the outset of the scheme and (b) at the most recent date for which information is available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The issue raised has been delegated to the chief executive of the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency and I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the current review of United Kingdom nuclear weapons safety includes an assessment of potential hazards during transportation and handling.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 19 November 1991, Official Report, column 153.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where his Department plans to dispose of decommissioned nuclear submarines.

Mr. Alan Clark: Various options for the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines remain under consideration.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to improve the procedures and practice of his Department in respect to the placing of contracts with small community-based suppliers, such as the Cardiff Institute for the Blind, and in respect to contracting procedures generally.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Ministry of Defence operates the provisions of the Government preference scheme in respect of priority suppliers, including the Cardiff Institute for the Blind. In essence this is designed to give such suppliers the opportunity to supply the widest possible range of the Ministry's requirements, but consistent with the need to consider value for the taxpayer's money.

We are constantly seeking to improve our procedures and practices, with the aim of improving value for money. The priority scheme apart, we do not in our contract procedures discriminate between suppliers of different size in our allocation of contracts. However, the practices employed have regard for the financial value of the contract concerned. Thus in general simplified procedures are employed for contracts of smaller value, and it is such contracts which are usually of most interest to small suppliers.

The MoD encourages new suppliers to make their capabilities known, and to this end have set up a new suppliers' service, with a small firms group within it, to help such concerns.

Military Sales

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang), Official Report, 6 December, column 272, if he will set out so much of the information requested on United Kingdom military sales that could be assembled without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) of 30 January, Official Report, column 655. I would be happy to write to the hon. Member also.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mackerel

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will allocate an extra sectoral mackerel quota to the Falmouth mackerel handliners.

Mr. Curry: No. Allocations for 1992 will be based on track records as agreed by the industry. However, in view of the increase in the western mackerel total allowable catch for 1992, the allocation for the handliners this year should be about 1,900 tonnes, which is a 39 per cent. increase over the initial 1991 allocation of 1,365 tonnes.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that (a) all trawlers within the south-west mackerel box are inspected to ensure that they are not taking more than their allocated mackerel by-catch and (b) that any fishing boat within the south-west mackerel box is entitled to operate there.

Mr. Curry: During the mackerel fishery season normal levels of fishery inspection in the south-west mackerel box are stepped up with an additional fishery surveillance vessel being employed. Prosecutions are taken in the event of contraventions being found.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the south-west mackerel conservation box in protecting the dedicated mackerel fishery.

Mr. Curry: Research carried out last year by the Department indicated that there were a high percentage of juvenile mackerel present in the box. Both the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea and the European Community Commission's scientific and technical committee on fisheries recommended that the box should remain in place to protect this important element of the western mackerel stock. I welcome the European Community decision to make the box a permanent arrangement.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps within the EC to ban industrial fishing within the south-west mackerel box.

Mr. Curry: There is at present no scientific evidence to suggest that the current level of permitted fishing in the south-west mackerel box causes damage to the mackerel stock. The situation is kept under constant review.

Spanish Fishing Boats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about Spanish fishing boats registering in Gibraltar as United Kingdom fishing vessels.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible for fishing boat owners —whatever their nationality—to register their boats in Gibraltar as United Kingdom fishing vessels.

Water Quality

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a copy of the provisional classification of the water quality of shellfish harvesting areas.

Mr. Curry: EC directive 91/492/EEC sets out health conditions for the production and sale of live bivalve molluscs. With certain possible exemptions, those conditions are to be implemented by 1 January 1993.

It is first necessary to classify production areas according to the treatment required before the molluscs may be marketed. With the co-operation of local authorities and other interested bodies, we are collecting the necessary data in England and Wales and will publish the results when work is complete.

Pollution, Fal Estuary

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether current steps taken to control pollution are adequate for long-term protection of the local shellfish industry in the Fal estuary, Cornwall;

(2) what action he is taking to monitor pollution levels of shellfish in the Fal estuary, Cornwall.

Mr. Curry: Short-term measures to minimise the problems caused by the sudden discharge from the Wheal Jane mine on 13 January are in place. The National Rivers Authority is working with mine owners to find an effective long-term solution. This will be welcome to the local shellfish industry.

When the potential problems with the Wheal Jane mine became apparent last year, we established a monitoring programme involving testing samples of shellfish from the Fal Estuary for levels of metal contaminants. Results from samples tested since the discharge on 13 January show that, with the exception of a possible slight increase in zinc levels, the incident has not resulted in an increase in metal contaminants in shellfish. The levels continue to be below those that would give cause for concern on public health grounds. Our monitoring programme will continue.

Advisory Committees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the advisory committees, coming under his Ministry, and concerned with public health whose members are requested to sign a declaration concerning the Official Secrets Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: None of the members of these independent MAFF advisory committees is required to sign any declaration under the Official Secrets Act 1989. The relevant committees are the Food Advisory Committee, the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, the Veterinary Medicines Committee and the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes.

Grant Schemes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums were paid out by each of his divisional offices for each (a) agricultural subsidy scheme and (b) grant scheme available to farmers in 1991; and how many agreements were entered into for each grant scheme.

Mr. Curry: The information requested in respect of the principal grant and subsidy schemes available to farmers in 1991 is as follows:

	Environmentally sensitive areas		Farm and conservation grant scheme[1]	Farm diversification grant scheme		Farm woodland scheme		Hill livestock compensatory allowances[2]		Sheep annual premium scheme[3]		Suckler cow premium scheme[3]		Set aside

[1] Number of improvement plans approved under EC part of scheme is not available by Divisional Office. Overall total for the year was 336. Figures for total payments relate to both EC and national parts of the scheme. Figures for the new farm and conservation grant scheme 1991 are not yet available.

[2] Figures for payments and number of claims cover the period 1 January to 30 November 1991. December figures are not yet available.

[4] Five-year set-aside scheme payments made in calendar year 1991 (including payments made in that year for 1989-90 and 1990-91 scheme years).

[5] Based on applications to join the five-year set-aside scheme from 1 October 1991.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total number of individual animals by species excluding cattle in which spongiform encephalopathies have been confirmed in each of (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991; and if he will indicate for each species the numbers believed to have contracted the disease by (i) vertical transmission, (ii) contaminated feeding stuff, (iii) transmission unknown or (iv) any other method.

Mr. Maclean: Naturally occurring spongiform encephalopathies in species other than cattle are not notifiable diseases. Nevertheless we are aware of the following cases in Great Britain confirmed by laboratory analysis:

	1988	1989	1990	1991
Cat	—	—	12	11
Arabian Oryx	—	1	—	—
Greater Kudu	—	1	1	1
Eland	—	1	—	2
Sheep	215	246	348	[1]894
Goats	not known	5	15	9

[1] Since 1991 reporting of cases of scrapie in sheep has been encouraged, to obtain material for spongiform encephalopathy research.

Epidemiological investigations were not carried out in the cases of scrapie, but it is considered to be transmissible both maternally and horizontally. Insufficient epidemiological data is available to draw firm conclusions on the other cases.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations of the refrigerated containers dedicated for the use of BSE carcases and controlled and monitored by his Ministry in the south-west of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: In addition to those at the two dedicated storage centres in Devon, there is a refrigeration container at an incineration plant in Gloucestershire and another in Avon which is used only in emergencies such as a breakdown at an incineration plant.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals have been agreed by the Council of Ministers to ensure that live animals or animal products originating from outside the country have been handled or processed in accordance with the Community's own regulations on welfare and hygiene; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Directive 91/628 on the protection of live animals during transport will provide that imports of animals from third countries shall be authorised only if the exporter and/or importer gives a written undertaking to comply with the requirements of the directive and has made arrangements to comply with them.

The directives on the welfare of pigs—91/630—and calves—91/629—will require animals imported from third countries to have been reared under at least equivalent conditions to those laid down in the directives.

Directive 90/675 will require member states to operate specific border checks to ensure that animal products imported from third countries comply with Community rules and national rules.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the policy on the maximum journey time which should be permitted for each species of food animal while being exported for slaughter.

Mr. Maclean: Directive 91/628 EEC on the protection of animals during transport provides for the Commission to propose maximum journey times for certain types of animal. This is to ensure that they do not travel for long periods without proper care including food and water. The hon. Member will be aware that our national arrangements provide for a maximum 12 to 15 hour interval between feeding and watering livestock during transport. In the Government's view this rule should be adopted throughout the Community.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposal to improve the standard of legislation, observance and enforcement of animal welfare between member states.

Mr. Maclean: The Government will continue to press for the high British standards of animal welfare to apply throughout the European Community. We have given full support to Commission proposals for establishing a Community inspectorate to ensure proper application of the legislation in all member states.

Feeding Stuffs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to improve surveillance of the animal feeding stuffs industry in the light of the proposed amendment to directive 74/63/EEC; and what is his estimate of the financial impact of this change on his Department and the industry.

Mr. Maclean: An independent expert group, appointed by the Government, is currently reviewing the regulatory framework covering the animal feedingstuffs industry, with particular reference to food safety aspects. The proposed amendment to directive 74/63/EEC is not expected to have a financial impact on the Department or directly on animal feedingstuffs manufacturers, who should receive additional safeguards regarding their raw materials.

Eggs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions, and in respect of how many eggs, action has been taken by his Department to refuse consignments of foreign produced eggs on the grounds of (a) salmonella infection and (b) either quality or health grounds.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not collected centrally.

ENERGY

Uranium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) Official Report, 23 January, columns 284–85, where the outstanding three kilogrammes of enriched uranium, not accounted for by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's investigation, is thought to be; and if he will set out the areas where managerial improvements at Dounreay are recommended.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The conclusions and recommendations of the report are confidential to my Department and Euratom. However, the Atomic Energy Authority has accepted all the recommendations made in the investigation report and has taken action to implement them. Furthermore, I have asked my officials to monitor implementation of the report's recommendations by the Atomic Energy Authority.

HEALTH

Hormone Therapy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per week of a course of growth hormone therapy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The average cost per week of a course of growth hormone therapy varies because dosage is related to the patient's weight. The estimated cost per week in September 1991 of treating a child weighing 40kg was between £183 and £192 per week, depending on the brand of hormone used.

European Year of Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department is making for the European year of elderly people and solidarity between the generations in 1993.

Mr. Dorrell: We are well advanced with our plans for the European year, in co-operation with the Department of Social Security. Following consultation with a wide range of national voluntary and professional bodies, statutory authorities and other relevant Government Departments, we have set up a group to advise on the conduct, promotion and evaluation of the programme in the United Kingdom. The group involves representatives of a wide range of organisations reflecting the interests of older people, including the National Pensioners Convention, and will take direct account wherever possible of the views and preferences of older people themselves. The programme in the United Kingdom will focus on four major themes:

Combating "agism" and promoting positive images of ageing;

Volunteering;

Health promotion and active leisure, including remaining mentally active;

Social integration, including problems of isolation and loneliness, information needs, and housing issues.

Four task groups are being set up to examine each of these themes. Their remit will outline the aims and activities to be achieved over the 12 months, with particular reference wherever appropriate to intergenerational and multicultural aspects.

Age Concern England—the National Council on Ageing will be responsible for the overall co-ordination of the official programme and the dissemination of news and information. The Department is providing funds for the costs of a secretariat for this purpose and has already committed £25,000 in the current year.

Magnetic Resonance Imagers

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell), 3 December 1991, Official Report, column 128, if he will set out the terms of his letter in the Official Report.

Mr. Waldegrave: The text of my letter is as follows:

> "During Health Questions on 3 December I said I would write with details of the number of magnetic resonance imagers available in England and Wales.
>
> At present there are 45 magnetic resonance scanners in use in England and Wales, 13 of these are in the private sector but all can be used for NHS patients if the health authority and the 'owner' agree. That, of course, was never feasible under the old funding system of the NHS.
>
> There was a grand total of two machines in England and Wales in 1979; both in experimental stage and not available for routine NHS use. I think you have helped me to draw attention to yet another area of rapid growth in the NHS under this Government!"

Homoeopathic Hospitals

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time at national health service homoeopathic hospitals for (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waiting time information on individual hospitals is not collected centrally.

Trent Regional Health Authority (Contracts)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants employed by Trent regional health authority are (a) on full-time contracts and (b) on maximum part-time contracts; and what plans he has to end part-time contracts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are currently 753 full-time and 411 part-time consultants—medical and dental—employed by Trent regional health authority. There are no plans to end part-time contracts.

Regional Alcohol Co-ordinators

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he decided to create or support the creation of the post of regional alcohol co-ordinator for each regional health authority in England;

(2) how much money has been (a) allocated and (b) spent by his Department to fund the appointment of regional alcohol co-ordinators in each regional health authority in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, respectively;

(3) to date, how many regional alcohol co-ordinator posts have been (a) approved and (b) appointed for regional health authority areas in England; and if he will list the regional health authorities where a regional alcohol co-ordinator has been appointed and the date of first appointment in each case.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's intention to fund a regional alcohol misuse co-ordinator post in each regional health authority in England was announced in the interdepartmental circular HN(89)4, a copy of which is available in the Library, on "Alcohol Misuse" issued in February 1989. Co-ordinators were appointed in all 14 regions between October 1989 and February 1990. The amount of money allocated to each regional health authority in 1990-91 was £[illegible]6,000. Two regions, Northern and North West Thames, received half their 1990-91 allocation because during that year alcohol misuse was only a part of their co-ordinators' responsibilities. All the money allocated was spent. From 1991-92 onwards funding for regional alcohol misuse co-ordinator posts has been built into health authorities' baselines and is not therefore identified separately. It does, however, attract annual uplifting for inflation.

Abortion

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by regional health authority area, the places approved by him under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967, indicating which of these places has been approved (a) to provide early medical abortion using Mifegyne and (b) to carry out terminations after the 20th week of pregnancy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table provides the information requested. Clinics approved to provide early medical abortion are marked (A) and those approved to carry out late termination up to 24 weeks are marked (B).

Cervical Screening

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the total amount of expenditure on his Department's cervical screening programme for the most recent available year and outline the various elements, such as general practitioner remuneration, concerned.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: General practitioners receive payments for achieving specific targets for cervical cancer screening; the total expenditure on these in 1990-91 was £40 million. No central estimate is made of the cost of the other main elements of the cervical screening programme: the laboratory examination of smears, or the administration of the arrangements for inviting women for screening.

Hospital Car Service

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the health service of the hospital car service in each of the last three years; and what is the estimated cost of running an alternative transport service.

Mr. Dorrell: The total cost to the NHS of the hospital car service in each of the last three years is given in the table.

No cost estimate is possible for an alternative service for which no plans exist.

Expenditure on Hospital Car Service

1988-89	9,659
1989-90	10,279
1990-91	11,332

Health Promotion Clinics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total level of payments to general practitioners for running health promotion clinics since the introduction of the new contract.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The total amount paid to general practitioners for running health promotion clinics between 1 April 1990 and 30 September 1991 was £63 million.

Psychiatric Prisons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many long-stay prisoners in psychiatric prisons were discharged into the care of either (a) the NHS, (b) the local authority or (c) voluntary or private care in each year since 1980; and how many of these prisoners were subsequently re-admitted.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 January 1992]: The information which is available relating to patients discharged from special hospitals is set out in the table. Full details of the type of care to which special hospital patients are discharged are not routinely collected by the Special Hospitals Service Authority and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

1981	219	81	43
1982	133	89	35
1983	144	71	35
1984	112	97	36
1985	104	96	33
1986	80	47	51
1987	95	47	23
1988	101	50	20
1989	125	43	21
1990	85	54	22

[1] Including repatriations. Figures relating to years 1980-85 include remittances to prison.

[3] Re-admissions from all sources (community, NHS hospital, court, prison).
Re-admissions do not necessarily relate to the same year as transfer or discharge.

Falkland Islands (Ultraviolet Light)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice his Department has made available, or plans to make available, to residents of the Falkland Islands and visitors to them, regarding the possible health effects of exposure to ultraviolet light.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I have been asked to reply.

The Falkland Islands Government are responsible for health matters in the Falkland Islands. They have not sought such advice from Her Majesty's Government.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Retirement Pension

11. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the current value of the basic state pension for (a) single pensioners and (b) married couple pensioners in 1980; and what is the comparable figure for 1992, uprated for each year in line with the increase in average earnings.

Miss Widdecombe: This April the basic retirement pension will be uprated to £54·15 for a single person and £86·70 for a married couple. Uprating by average earnings since 1980 would imply weekly rates of £68·65 and £109·60 respectively from April which would cost a man on average earnings and his employer £9·40 per week between them in extra national insurance contributions.

16. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current level of the married couple's retirement pension and the corresponding figure for 1979, updated by reference to annual increases in prices and average male adult earnings, whichever was the greater.

Miss Widdecombe: The current weekly level of basic retirement pension for a married couple is £83·25. The calculation for which the hon. Member asks would give a figure of £105·40, and would entail an increase of £8·70 per week in the national insurance contributions payable by a man on average earnings and his employer.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of raising the basic state pension in 1992-93 to (a) £60 per week for single people, £96 per week for married couples and (b) £59·15 per week for single people, £94·70 per week for married couples, on the basis that the increased pensions were paid to all regardless of contributory record.

Miss Widdecombe: The extra cost to the national insurance fund of providing a flat rate basic retirement pension to all Great Britain residents of state pension age or over to replace all other flat rate contributory benefits in 1992-93 would be (a) £4·3 billion and (b) £3·9 billion. There would be some off-setting savings on expenditure on income-related benefits.

The combined weekly cost in extra national insurance contributions of these changes to a man on average earnings and his employer would be (a) £6 and (b) £5·50.

Invalid Care Allowance

17. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to change the rules governing invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval, from April we intend to increase the earnings disregard for invalid care allowance from £30 to £40 a week. This will enable more carers to enjoy the advantages of a link with the world of work.

Attendance and Mobility Allowances

18. Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what improvements have been made to attendance allowance and mobility allowance in the last two years.

Mr. Scott: We have made a number of significant improvements: in 1990 we extended attendance allowance to the under-twos and gave automatic and immediate entitlement to the higher rate for people who are terminally ill. These measures have brought help to over 80,000 people to date at an annual cost of over £40 million. We also ensured entitlement to mobility allowance for people who are both deaf and blind and for people without both legs. From April 1992 disability living allowance will bring further important improvements to the help currently available.

25. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes have been made to attendance allowance and mobility allowance in the last two years.

Mr. Scott: We have made a number of significant improvements: for attendance allowance, in 1990 we extended entitlement to the under twos and, for people who are terminally ill, we made entitlement to the higher rate automatic and abolished the six-month qualifying period. In the same year we made regulations to ensure entitlement to mobility allowance for people who are both deaf and blind, and in 1991 we made entitlement automatic for people without both legs. From April 1992, disability living allowance will replace and extend the help currently available through attendance allowance for people disabled before age 65 and mobility allowance. Attendance allowance will remain for people whose disabilities start after that age.

Pensioners

19. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on targeting help towards particularly needy pensioner groups.

Miss Widdecombe: In April 1992 the benefit payable to low income pensioners will be uprated by 7 per cent.—nearly 3 per cent. more than the retail prices index. In addition to this, pensioners aged 80 and over, and younger disabled pensioners in receipt of income related benefits, will receive further increases worth £60 million in a full year.

This brings the total extra help to pensioners in receipt of income related benefits to some £335 million a year above normal upratings over the last two and a half years.

Child Benefit

20. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many increases in child benefit have been announced (a) in the past 18 months and (b) in the preceding three years.

Mr. Jack: In the past 18 months we have announced three increases in child benefit. In the preceding three years, help was channeled into benefits designed to assist low-income families with the result that overall resources available to families with children are now greater than if child benefit had simply been uprated throughout the period.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of raising each of the two rates of child benefit by £1 per week in 1992-93.

Mr. Jack: On the basis of the latest available information, it is estimated that the gross cost would be around £640 million, and the net cost about £450 million.

Family Credit

21. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of families receiving family credit; and how many families were receiving family income supplement in 1979.

Mr. Jack: In October 1991, a total of 348,000 families were receiving family credit compared with 78,000 receiving family income supplement in April 1979.

Private Nursing Homes

22. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to revise the arrangements governing the payment of income support to those in private nursing homes; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to revise the way income support is paid before the full implementation of community care in April 1993.

Income Support

23. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the level of income support for families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Miss Widdecombe: We receive many representations, including a number about the benefit arrangements for people who live in board and lodging accommodation. We keep these arrangements under review and have taken steps to make them more efficient and fair.

Disability Benefits

26. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to publicise the new disability benefits that come into effect later in the current year.

Mr. Scott: We are planning a carefully targeted and comprehensive publicity campaign for the two new benefits—disability living allowance and disability working allowance—with the help of disabled people and their organisations. The plans include a major national television campaign starting in early February, supported by more detailed advertisements in the national press. In addition we are writing more than 1 million letters to all existing beneficiaries of attendance allowance and mobility allowance to let them know about the existing benefit changes and how to claim extra help, if appropriate. We have commissioned a series of 12 programmes about the new benefits entitled "The Way Ahead", on the BBC select out-of-hours service. The programmes, which started on 21 January, are aimed primarily at advisers and carers of disabled people. We are also writing to health professionals such as doctors and nurses to let them know about the changes.

Pensioners (Income)

27. Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners are in the top half of the income distribution; and what were the comparable figures for 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: I am pleased to tell the House that 28 per cent. of pensioners were in the top half of the total income distribution compared with only 24 per cent. in 1979.

National Insurance

28. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the weekly burden of national insurance contributions on someone on one and a half times male average earnings.

Mr. Jack: Currently someone earning £490 a week pays £31·46 in national insurance contributions. If there were no upper earnings limit, a married man earning this amount would lose a further £9 off typical take-home pay of £360 a week.

Low-income Families

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what extra help, over and above normal upratings, has been made available to help low-income families since 1987.

Mr. Jack: The restructuring of the income-related benefits in 1988 enabled extra help to be directed at low income families and from April this will be worth more than £600 million a year in real terms.

State Earnings-related Pensions

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operation of SERPS.

Mr. Jack: The state earnings-related pension scheme —SERPS—is operating satisfactorily and more than 3 million pensioners are in receipt of an additional pension from SERPS. The scheme is now on a sound financial footing and future generations should be able to meet the state's pension commitments in the next century.

Hours of Work

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of (a) income support and (b) housing benefit during 1991 had their benefit reduced by the presence of non-dependants; and how many of these were (i) working more than 24 hours a week, (ii) working between 16 and 24 hours a week and (iii) working less than 16 hours.

Miss Widdecombe: Data drawn from the 1990 housing benefit management information statistics and the 1990 annual statistical inquiry indicate that the number of beneficiaries whose benefit is calculated to take account of the presence of non-dependants and the associated number of non-dependants on 31 May 1990 were as follows:

	Income Support	Housing Benefit
Number of claimants	30,000	350,000
Number of non-dependants	38,000	510,000

Information on hours worked by non-dependants is not available from these sources. However, modelling using data drawn from the 1986-88 family expenditure surveys uprated to 1991-92 prices and benefit levels suggest that the proportions of non-dependants working for the hours stated would be:

Non-dependants who give rise to a non-dependant deduction: estimated percentage working stated hours per week

	Claimants benefit
Hours worked	Income support	Housing benefit
Less than 16	32	38
16-23	1	6
24 or more	67	56

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amendments he is considering to the disability working allowance scheme before it is introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) earlier today.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the new disability working allowance comes into operation.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wealdon (Sir G. Johnson Smith) earlier today.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) pensioner households, (b) families with children and (c) other households who are tenants of (i) local authorities and new towns, (ii) housing associations and (iii) other landlords, are estimated to be receiving (x) maximum housing benefit with no deductions for dependants, (y) maximum housing benefit but with deductions for non-dependants and (z) a lesser amount of housing benefit, towards their rent payments at May 1990 and May 1991, in Great Britain as a whole, and in each region for which figures are available; and what proportion of the total number of tenants in each category they represent.

Miss Widdecombe: The available estimates for May 1990 are as follows:

Housing benefit—Great Britain

	(i) Local authority tenants			(ii) and (iii) Private and housing association tenants
Premium	(a) Pensioner	(b) Family	(c) Other	(a) Pensioner	(b) Family	(c) Other
(x) Maxmimum benefit	723,00	530,000	416,000	235,000	132,000	273,000
(y) Maximum with non-dependant deduction	101,000	32,000	71,000	12,000	4,000	9,000
(z) Other lesser amount	812,000	78,000	165,000	186,000	21,000	196,000

Notes:

(1) Fifty-seven per cent. of local authority tenants receive housing benefit, of which 32 per cent. are pensioners, 13 per cent. are families and 13 per cent. other.

(2) Forty-seven per cent. of private and housing association tenants receive housing benefit, of which 19 per cent. are pensioners, 7 per cent. families and 21 per cent. other.

(3) Estimates of regional figures are unreliable.

(4) May 1991 information is not yet available.

Source: Housing Benefit Management Information System.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will change the rules on housing benefit so that a local authority that successfully uncovers a fraud does not lose subsidy.

Miss Widdecombe: A local authority which successfully detects fraud and recovers wrongly paid benefit need not lose financially. It receives partial subsidy on the overpayment and retains all the money it recovers. If an authority received the same full rate of subsidy for fraudulent housing benefit awards as for legitimate ones, there would be little if any financial incentive to put resources into verifying new claims. Under the present rules, however, authorities have an incentive to scrutinise claims carefully because they will receive less subsidy if fraud is subsequently detected. In addition, as the partial subsidy made on a fraudulent payment is retained, authorities have a financial incentive to put resources into recovery.

Concession Cards

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce an over-60s concession card in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom, together with all other member states, is currently considering the implementation of a Communitywide over-60s card in accordance with the EC recommendation of May 1989 While the United Kingdom has declared itself in favour of the proposal, if it can be made to work effectively throughout the Community, some countries still have reservations about the scheme. The Department is continuing discussions with officials of the Commission and other member states in an effort to resolve outstanding problems.

I recently wrote to Members of the European Parliament about this matter and I will send the hon. Member a copy of the letter.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will issue instructions concerning cold weather payments to ensure all Bradford postcode areas are covered by the same weather centre; if he will ensure that all those eligible to the payment in Bradford are paid for the period 7 December to 13 December and for any period since, when only some people living in Bradford postcode areas have received payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The cold weather payments scheme is based on a system which ensures that the weather in all parts of the country is monitored by an appropriate weather station. Payments cannot be made for an area covered by a weather station that did not register temperatures cold enough to trigger a payment under the regulations, but all payments due under the social fund cold weather regulations have been, or will be made shortly.

Social Fund Inspectors

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many social fund inspectors were employed on 31 December;

(2) how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 31 December.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the Social Fund Commissioner that on 31 December 1991, there were 64 social fund inspectors—SFIs—employed and 3,463 review applications outstanding for more than one month. A further eight SFIs started work on 6 January 1992. They are currently undergoing training.

Financial and Management Information System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 286, what developments have taken place in his use of FAMIS during his tenure as Secretary of State; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Development of the early phases of the financial and management information system, commenced in October 1990 and they are on target for implementation to begin in April 1992. Meanwhile, the Department has developed interim resource management facilities to improve budget and work control and has introduced a devolved personnel management system.

Tuesday 4 February 1992

TRANSPORT

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what data on radioactive materials transported into and within the United Kingdom is routinely collected by his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: Data supplied about consignments of radioactive materials that have to be notified to the Department of Transport before shipment were detailed in the reply given to the Hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 29 January.

Macclesfield Relief Road

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work on the new north-south relief road in Macclesfield to be completed.

Mr. Chope: I expect the section of road between Flash lane and Hibel road to open to traffic on 10 February. Work on the remaining section between Hibel road and Mill lane should be completed shortly after Easter.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for the delay in completing the new north-south relief road in Macclesfield.

Mr. Chope: Additional contract works, difficulties with the diversion of statutory undertakers apparatus and the late delivery of the Middlewood way footbridge are the main reasons for the delay in completion.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which supplier was commissioned by his Department to provide the Middlewood way footbridge for the north-south relief road in Macclesfield; at what cost this contract was placed; when it will be fulfilled; and why it was late in delivery.

Mr. Chope: The Middlewood way footbridge was included in the Department's contract for the relief road with Fairclough Civil Engineering at an estimated cost of £370,000. I expect work on the bridge to be completed in the next two weeks. The reasons for the delay in delivery are matters between Fairclough's and its suppliers.

Lorry Drivers (Diabetes)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many lorry drivers who treat their diabetes by injections of insulin have had their HGV licences revoked since April 1991.

Mr. Chope: Forty insulin treated drivers had their large goods vehicle—previously HGV—licence entitlement revoked between August and December last year. Prior to that, no manual or computer summary record was kept of the numbers of insulin revocations.

Motor Taxation

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total revenue raised from motor taxation in each year from 1979 to 1992; and what is the estimated revenue for 1992-93.

Mr. Rifkind: The figures are as follows:

Motoring Taxation (United Kingdom)

£ million

	Vehicle Excise Duty	Fuel Duty	Total
1979-80	1,162	2,667	3,829
1980-81	1,360	3,338	4,698
1981-82	1,618	4,425	6,043
1982-83	1,840	5,030	6,870
1983-84	1,997	5,414	7,411
1984-85	2,264	5,871	8,135
1985-86	2,426	6,253	8,679
1986-87	2,520	7,302	9,822
1987-88	2,599	7,651	10,250
1988-89	2,767	8,501	11,268
1989-90	2,948	8,556	11,504
1990-91	2,923	9,455	12,378
1991-92	[1]2,957	[1]11,000	[1]13,957

[1] Revenue for 1992-93 will depend on tax rates in that year.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the arrangements similar to United Kingdom vehicle excise duty applicable in each of the other countries of the European Community.

Mr. Chope: Information on the vehicle taxes imposed by other EC countries can be found in "World Road Statistics 1986-1990", published by the International Road Federation. A copy is held in the Library.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the categories of vehicle in respect of which vehicle excise duty is chargeable; what is the current rate for each such category; when was the most recent change in respect of each category; what was the previous rate; and what was the revenue derived from each such category in the latest convenient period.

Mr. Chope: The categories and current rates are set out in Form V149, available from post offices and vehicle registration offices. I attach a copy for my hon. Friend.

For road taxation revenue purposes, these categories fall into five vehicle classes. The estimated VED revenue for each is published in "The allocation of road track costs 1991/91", a copy of which is available in the Library.

The 12-montly rate for cars and light vans was £90 prior to 1985. Rates for motor cycles were increased by between £5 and £10 in 1991. The tax structure for taxis, buses and coaches was reorganised in 1989, with increases of between £47·50 and £395 related to passenger-carrying capacity.

The VED structure for goods vehicles exceeding 3·5 tonnes was simplified in 1990, involving increases in rates of between £20 and £470 for 140,000 lorries and reductions of between £30 and £570 for 3,800 vehicles. Rates for 320,000 lorries remained the same. The "other vehicles" class comprises recovery vehicles, special machines—mobile cranes, and so on—and "special types"—exceptionally large or heavy vehicles. The rate for recovery vehicles was increased by £25 and the rate for special machines by £14 in 1991. The rate for "special types" was increased in 1990 by £150.

Motorway Services

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that Mercury telephone boxes are installed at all motorway service areas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chope Leases for motorway service areas—MSAs—in England, require as a standard the provision of public telephones. The choice of supplier is a matter for the MSA operator. MSAs in Wales and Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland respectively.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made towards (a) increasing competition in the provision of services on motorways and (b) increasing the number of service areas on motorways.

Mr. Chope: The citizens charter announced the Government's intention to deregulate the provision of motorway service areas with the aim of providing more services more quickly. Detailed proposals will be announced shortly.

Norwich Southern Bypass

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) who specified the mix of materials which has been found to be faulty in the construction of the Norwich southern bypass; and if (a) his Department, (b) the consulting engineers or (c) the contractors are liable for the resulting cost;

(2) what is the estimate of the cost of remedial work on the Norwich southern bypass following the discovery of a faulty mix of materials in its construction.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 January 1992]: The Department's specification for highway works which incorporates British standards is used on all its trunk road contracts including Norwich southern bypass. It lays down criteria for road materials which allow contractors and suppliers a wide choice to encourage the use of local and low cost sources of raw materials to minimise transportation and environmental costs. At Norwich each of the four contracts is using a different combination of ingredients for the bituminous mix. The sources of supply for each varies and some local Norfolk aggregates are being used.

The particular combinations of aggregates and bituminous binder used in the heavy duty macadam exhibited unexpected deformation causing a suspension of work while the possible causes were investigated.

Adjustments have been made to the mixes within the British standard to provide a material which has greater resistance to deformation.

The extent and apportionment of any additional costs will be resolved under the terms of the contract.

Present indications are that the completed bypass will be opened to traffic by the original contract completion date.

HOME DEPARTMENT

External Frontiers Convention

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the external frontiers convention with the universal declaration of human rights, the international covenant on civil and political rights, the European convention on human rights, ILO conventions 97 and 143, the Helsinki final act and the Paris charter and the Council of Europe social charter.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no reason to believe that the draft external frontiers convention, signature of which has been held up by disagreement with the Spanish Government over a provision concerning application to Gibraltar, is in breach of any of the United Kingdom's international obligations.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the external frontiers convention with the European convention on the legal status of migrant workers and the international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The United Kingdom is not a party to either of the conventions on migrant workers.

Working Men's Club (Membership Application)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the allegation that applications for membership of a Birmingham working men's club featured in the recent Commission for Racial Equality case were made without the applicant's knowledge; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The conduct of formal investigations and the issuing of non-discrimination notices are matters for the Commission for Racial Equality.

Births (Airports)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children since 1981 have been born in the departure lounges of airports at (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick, (c) Leeds/Bradford and (d) Manchester; and how many such babies were affected by provisions of the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office does not keep records of how many children were born in airport departure lounges, but any child born in such a place would be affected by the British Nationality Act 1981, section 1 of which determines whether or not the child has acquired British citizenship by birth.

Mentally Disordered (Press Coverage)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he received a copy of the Matthew Trust report on the Press Complaints Commission and BBC regarding media coverage of the mentally disordered and distressed; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend received the report on 14 January. He has noted its conclusions and the director of the Matthew Trust will be receiving a reply shortly.

Prison Ships

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the reintroduction of prison ships; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: On Monday 3 February, there were 1,221 prisoners held in police cells. My right hon. Friend has asked the prison service to examine a range of options for reducing this number. Among other possibilities, officials will be investigating the use abroad of floating facilities to house prisoners. However, we have no plans at this stage to introduce such facilities here.

Births (British Citizens)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children born in the United Kingdom since 1981 are not British citizens.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available.

Spring Hill Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether following the recent escape from Springfield prison he will institute an immediate inquiry into security at the prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to Spring Hill prison.

The prisoner who absconded from Spring Hill prison on 5 December 1991 has now been recaptured. Security at Spring Hill is appropriate for an open prison. The allocation of prisoners to open prisons always carries with it an element of risk.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he proposes to introduce electronic tagging of offenders under the Criminal Justice Act 1991;

(2) what progress has been made towards implementation of electronic tagging of offenders.

Mr. John Patten: Our proposals will be announced shortly.

International Criminals

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now take steps to ensure that international criminals serve their sentences in a high security environment.

Mrs. Rumbold: Offences committed abroad are already taken into account in the categorisation and allocation process. That process is set out in circular instruction 7/1988, a copy of which is in the Library.

Prison Closures

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has reached a decision as to (a) whether Warrington young offenders institution and (b) which other prison department establishments, are to close following the estate review 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary gave my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 30 January at column 647.

Prison Security

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now implement all recent recommendations for improving prison security.

Mrs. Rumbold: Chapter 2 of the White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice", Cm 1647, set out the Government's plans for improving security in prison service establishments. Those plans are being implemented. As to the recent report of an audit of security in prison service establishments holding category A prisoners, conducted by Mr. Ronald Hadfield and Mr. Gordon Lakes, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 16 December 1991 at column 13.

European Year of Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home department what plans his Department is making for the European year of elderly people and solidarity between the generations in 1993.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health is leading the Government's work on this, in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security: I refer my hon. friend to his reply. He is drawing up plans in consultation with a wide range of national voluntary and professional bodies, statutory authorities and other relevant Government Departments.

Immigration Rules (Marriages)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the procedures followed by registrars who conduct marriages so as to ensure that there is no evasion of immigration rules.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

Superintendent registrars are statutory officers exercising functions under the Marriage and Registration Acts under the direction of the Registrar General. They are not immigration officers. If a superintendent registrar has good reason to suspect that the proposed marriage of a person from abroad has been arranged for the sole purpose of evading statutory immigration controls he/she is instructed to report the facts to the Registrar General. If the Registrar General is satisfied that the marriage is purely one of convenience then the facts will be passed on to the Home Office.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what departments and numbers of civil servants are due to be relocated to the north-west in future plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table lists, with likely timings, the plans which departments have announced for relocating or locating civil service jobs away from the south-east which have still to be implemented or completed.

Department and Dispersal location	Number of posts	Likely timing
Inland Revenue, Birkenhead	170	1992
Social Security Child Support Agency, Birkenhead	500	1993
Customs and Excise, Liverpool	1,301	1990-95
Customs and Excise, Manchester	390	1990-95
Employment Group, Runcorn	613	1990-93
Employment Group, Bootle	61	1992
Land Registry, Birkenhead	110	1992-93
Total number of posts	3,145

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by department the number of civil service jobs to be relocated in the west midlands, specifying the geographic location of the areas to which they will move and detailing the dates upon which it is planned to make these relocations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department of Social Security and the Home Office have announced plans for relocating or locating civil service jobs in the west midlands which have yet to be implemented. The Department of Social Security will be opening a Child Support Agency Office in Dudley from 1 April 1993, creating 500 new administrative jobs. The Home Office will be relocating 12 posts from the forensic science service to Birmingham within the next 18 months.

Income Tax

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much 1p on the basic rate of income tax would yield in 1992-93 in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales.

Mr. Maude: Increasing the basic rate of income tax to 26 per cent. would yield about £1·95 billion, at 1992-93 levels of income. Separate information for England, Scotland, and Wales is not available.

Board of Inland Revenue

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 487, when he expects to make his decision on proposals relating to the review of management and trading and the review of the organisation and structure of the Board of Inland Revenue; and what consultation he has undertaken.

Mr. Maude: I have nothing to add to my answer of 28 January at column 487.

Excise Duties

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implementation of EC single market legislation associated with excise duties.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Commissioners of Customs and Excise have issued draft Finance Bill clauses relating to holding and movement of goods subject to excise duties to relevant trade representative bodies for consultation. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the terms of reference of the study commissioned from University college, Cardiff, concerning the efficiency of the Customs and Excise Agency in its service at airports and seaports; when he expects it to be completed; when it was initiated; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 3 February 1992]: The Economic and Social Research Council sponsored Mr. E. Maguire, Professor R. Morgan and Mr. C. Kemp to research complaints to and against central Government Departments. The immigration service and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise were selected to be researched, in a project which started on 1 October 1989. Research was completed in September 1991. A draft report has been produced, and is with the Government Departments to identify factual inaccuracies before publication.

The terms of reference of the research were to construct a comprehensive picture of complaints received in all areas of the Department, analyse the grievance mechanisms, examine internal attitudes towards complaints, and examine any managerial or policy making use made of complaints patterns or outcomes. The research therefore extended far wider than the efficiency of the service at airports and seaports, although this area was covered in two small exercises seeking travellers' and complainants' views through questionnaires.

The survey of travellers concluded that most had no contact with officers of Customs and Excise, and of those who did have contact, most rated the officers positively. The sample of complainants found that few were happy with the responses that they had received from the Department, but nearly half felt that they had achieved something and more than half were impressed by some aspects of the response—especially its speed and the quality of the written reply.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nursery Education

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places in nursery schools and classes were provided by local education authorities in 1990-91 and 1991-92 in England and Wales; how many of these places were (a) full time and (b) part time; and what was the total number of full-time equivalent places provided.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the number of pupils in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1991, the latest date for which information is available, is given in the table. The table also contains information about the number of pupils under five in infant classes in maintained primary schools. Information on schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales.

All pupils under the age of 5 in maintained nursery and primary schools as at January 1991

Private Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to extend the citizens charter so as to cover any grievance which a parent might have against a private school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: No.

Primary Schools

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his estimates for the increases in public spending necessary if all primary schools in England were to have a maximum limit of (a) 30 and (b) 32 on class sizes.

Mr. Fallon: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 24 January at column 343.

Pupils (Learning by Rote)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he gives (a) to local education authorities and (b) to Her Majesty's inspectors regarding the desirability of pupils learning multiplication tables by rote; and what representations he has had on the matter.

Mr. Eggar: The national curriculum sets out what is to be taught in schools, and this includes the requirement for pupils to learn mutiplication tables up to 10 times 10. It is for teachers to decide how to deliver the curriculum, and I have not given any guidance on how pupils should learn their tables, nor received any representations on the subject.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 4 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Hong Kong

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, columns 503-4, how many of the Ministers listed, other than the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and himself, took part in party political activities during their visit in addition to their official duties.

Further to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 28 January, at columns 503-4, the list of ministerial visits omitted the visit to Hong Kong of Lord Brabazon, Minister of State for Transport, in February 1991.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Skelmersdale

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the assistance available from his Department and the European Community for trade and industry projects in Skelmersdale new town.

Mr. Leigh: Skelmersdale is within the development areas, so firms there are able to benefit from the complete range of assistance available under the DTI's enterprise initiative. The individual measures of support are described in existing departmental publications on the initiative, which are widely available and arrangements have been made for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Skelmersdale new town also forms part of the Mersey basin operational programme area, which qualifies as an objective 2 area under the European Commission structural funds regime. As such, Skelmersdale is eligible to receive European regional development funds and structural funds for appropriate projects related to infrastructure, business support and training.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what response he has made to representations concerning the adequacy of the supervision by the Securities and Investments Board and the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation of the managers of the pension funds of companies of which the late Robert Maxwell was a director.

Mr. Redwood: My Department is in close touch with SIB and IMRO about regulatory lessons on supervision of pension fund managers to be drawn from the Maxwell case.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the annual size and increase in the value of exports and imports of manufactured goods in each year since 1985 to (a) the European Community, (b) the United States, (c) Japan and (d) all other countries; and also express the year on year changes as an index with 1985 as the base.

Mr. Sainsbury: The available information is contained in the following tables. Manufactured goods are defined as sections 5 to 8 of the standard international trade classification.

Auditors

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will bring forward proposals to prevent auditors from taking appointments as liquidators, administrators or receivers; and if he will consult the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and the Institute of Chartered Accountants in Scotland about the necessary changes to their rules.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to do so. The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland have published ethical guidelines for their members and these preclude any firm, or member of that firm, which has had a "continuing professional relationship" with any company from accepting an appointment as an insolvency practitioner in respect of it. In this way conflicts of interest are avoided, particularly between those who may have acted as auditors to the company and any subsequent liquidator.

Peter Dixon and Peter Cameron-Webb

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in the investigation into the activities of Peter Dixon and Peter Cameron-Webb at Lloyd's.

Mr. Redwood: The City of London police and the Serious Fraud Office announced in December 1988 that warrants had been issued for Peter Dixon and Peter Cameron-Webb in connection with the Lloyd's PCW investigation. Both were, and are understood to have remained, resident in the United States, but due to certain restrictions could not be extradited.

The final report of the Companies Act inspectors who investigated the affairs of Minet Holdings plc and WMD Underwriting Agencies Ltd., which details the activities of Dixon and Cameron-Webb at Lloyd's, was published in August 1990. At that time, the Secretary of State announced his intention to make applications under section 8 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 in respect of Dixon, Cameron-Webb and John Wallrock. On 31 October 1991, Wallrock was disqualified for five years. The proceedings in respect of Dixon and Cameron-Webb are due to be heard on 6 February.

Insolvency Service Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will supply a figure for the cost of issuing name badges to the staff of the insolvency service.

Mr. Redwood: The cost was £3,657·60.

Hinckley, Leicestershire

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Hinckley in Leicestershire is placed under objective 2 of the European regional development fund.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 31 January 1992]: No. The European Commission refused the Government's proposal that it should be.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Clocking In

Mr. Cox: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if he will list the grades of staff employed who are required to clock in and clock out at the start and finish of their day's work.

Mr. Beith: All grades of Refreshment Department industrial staff are required to register their attendance by clock.

Staff Insurance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission whether (a) police and security staff, (b) catering and cleaning staff, (c) Library staff, (d) Official Report staff, (e) Committee Office staff, (f) Fees Office staff and (g) hon. Members' secretaries and research assistants are covered by an insurance scheme in the event of (i) industrial injury or (ii) an act of terrorism in the Palace of Westminster and its outbuildings.

Mr. Beith [holding answer 22 January 1992]: All staff employed by the House of Commons Commission are covered against injury or death sustained in the course of their duties by the provisions of the House of Commons staff pension scheme.

Insurance cover has been arranged for Members in respect of employers' liability to provide for any of their staff who suffer injury or death at work due to the Member's negligence. The House of Commons Commission is considering the question of further provision to cover Members' staff against acts of terrorism.

The terms and conditions of service of police officers and security staff employed in the parliamentary estate are the responsibility of the Home Office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Cable Channel

Sir David Steel: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will take steps (a) to arrange for the cable parliamentary channel to be available on the monitors in No. 1 Parliament street and (b) to remove from them the interruption caused by noises from the House of Lords annunciator.

Mr. MacGregor: As I said in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 27 January (Official Report, columns 701-2), the question of supplying Members' offices with the parliamentary cable channel (or the clean television feed direct from the Chamber) is to be discussed shortly by the Broadcasting Committee. If it approves the proposal in principle, the Committee will then wish to consider whether such facilities should be made available immediately to those parts of the parliamentary estate (such as No. 1 Parliament street) which are already suitably cabled, or whether it would be preferable to introduce the service for all Members, as far as practicable, simultaneously.

The provision on the monitors of information from the House of Lords annunciator service has been considered to be generally useful. Unfortunately, it would not be possible to suppress the information from individual monitors.

Braille Transcription Service

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to provide a Braille transcription service to enable hon. Members to correspond with their blind constituents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall ask the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) as Chairman of the Administration Committee, to invite the Finance and Administration Department to examine the feasibility and possible cost of providing such a service for Members.

Members' Pensions

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Lord President of the Council what provision has been made in recent years in the estimates of pensions for the staff of hon. Members; how this provision compares with the amount notionally available; what the amount actually disbursed has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The maximum sum available to an hon. Member to make pension contributions in respect of a person employed by him and paid out of the office costs allowance is limited in any one year to 10 per cent. of the limit of the office costs allowance for that year.

Although the total sum notionally available is therefore equal to 10 per cent. of the provision for the office costs allowance included in the Estimates for the House of Commons, the sum actually available is further restricted by the application of a pension provision limitation of 10 per cent. of the gross salary paid to an individual secretary/research assistant. Given that most Members are unlikely to devote the whole of their office costs allowance to salaries, because of the need to meet other expenditure, the notionally available figures shown below are not very relevant.

With that proviso, the total sums notionally available, together with the total sums actually expended in each of the last three completed years, are:

	Notionally available £	Actual expenditure £
1988-89	1,468,000	776,795
1989-90	1,560,000	836,961
1990-91	1,775,000	948,219

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Croatia

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of tanks obtained from European nations by the Republic of Croatia for the defence of its borders, and their source.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no evidence that any European nation is in breach of the United Nations embargo.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the reports produced in Yugoslavia by the international team of experts have now been submitted to the Hague conference on Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I presume that my hon. Friend is referring to the team of experts alluded to in the report published in The Guardian on 17 January 1992. We have no report of the identity of this team or its activities.

EMPLOYMENT

Offshore Oil

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will introduce a licensing fee for oil companies operating in the North sea to cover the cost of providing health and safety inspectors in connection with their operations.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Commission has not adopted a general policy onshore of charging to cover the costs of health and safety inspection, in view of the difficulties of devising an equitable and workable system. Similar considerations apply offshore, but charges will continue to be made to cover the costs of regular examinations of life-saving appliances and fire-fighting equipment on installations.

Holidays

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to ensure that all employees have a statutory right to two weeks minimum paid holiday.

Mr. Forth: We have no such plans.

Idnal Fisher Ltd.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Health and Safety Executive is to initiate a prosecution against Idnal Fisher Ltd., Bradford following the death of Jashir Singh on 9 April.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive is considering what, if any, action is appropriate following the investigation into the fatal accident to Jashir Singh on 9 April 1991 at Idnal Fisher Ltd., Bradford. I have asked the HSE's area director for West and North Yorkshire to write to the hon. Member when a decision has been made.

Crane Accident, St. Mary's

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when investigating the accident to a crane on 13 July 1991 at St. Mary's, Isles of Scilly, following the discovery that the safe load indicator was defective due to the damaged crane, what other sources of information were sought to verify its condition when the crane was operational.

Mr. Forth: As part of the Health and Safety Executive's investigation to establish the condition of the safe load indicator on the crane immediately before the accident on 13 July 1991, the HSE inspector interviewed witnesses to the accident to determine whether the warning bell had been ringing when the crane began to overturn; obtained from the company a copy of the crane manufacturer's data sheet which describes the crane's main dimensions and lifting capacities; observed the engraved plastic cards in the crane cab which also describe the dimensions and capacities of the crane; examined the cam fitted in the automatic safe load indicator; obtained a copy of the last statutory examination of the machine by a competent person.

Allied Colloids Ltd.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the investigation into the accident to James Armstrong at Allied Colloids Ltd., Low Moor, on 25 April 1988 was concluded; what recommendations for improving the loading arrangements were made; if these were implemented; and if he will make a statement on the safety of current arrangements.

Mr. Forth: No accident to James Armstrong at Allied Colloids Ltd, Low Moor on 25 April 1988 has been reported to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. R. K. Palmer (Accident)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will obtain from the Health and Safety Executive information regarding the accident to R. K. Palmer on 5 August 1991; and whether a prosecution is to be undertaken against either Nationwide Access Platforms Ltd., or A & P Appledore (Falmouth) Ltd.

Mr. Forth: Mr. R. K. Palmer, and employee of A & P Appledore (Falmouth) Ltd., suffered injuries to his legs and head while working on a mobile elevated work platform.

The Health and Safety Executive has initiated prosecution action against Nationwide Access Platforms Ltd. for an alleged breach of section 3(1) of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 20 November 1991, Official Report, column 215, what guidance is given to Health and Safety inspectors about the reliance to be placed on statements taken by an employer from employees in investigating accidents where employees are injured.

Mr. Forth: Health and Safety Executive inspectors carrying out investigations into accidents in which employees are injured, conduct their own independent inquiries. Inspectors are advised to collect all the relevant information during their investigations and this could include statements taken by an employer from employees which may be helpful. However, inspectors personally interview whoever, in their professional judgment, is able to assist them in establishing the facts and do not rely on statements taken by employers.

A. Marks and Company Ltd.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action is being undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive regarding the fatal accident to Mr. Lewis Drake at A. Marks & Co. Ltd., Low Moor, Bradford, regarding prosecution; and what changes are to be made to operational procedures to avoid any repetition of the accident.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive has completed its investigation into the fatal accident to Mr. Lewis Drake at A. Marks & Co. Ltd., Bradford. It has deferred a decision on what if any further action may be appropriate until after the inquest into Mr. Drake's death has been held. Following advice from the HSE, the company has already carried out a number of modifications to the plant to prevent a repetition of the accident.

Labour Statistics

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been employed in (a) agriculture and horticulture, (b) coal extraction and solid fuels, (c) shipbuilding and repairs and (d) iron and steel, in Great Britain in 1991.

Mr. Jackson: The information is given in the table:

Employees in employment industries (SIC 80)	Great Britain Thousands September 1991
Agriculture and horticulture (Class 01)	280·8
Coal extraction and solid fuels (Group 111)	79·7
Iron and steel (Group 221)	47·4
Shipbuilding and ship repairing (Group 361)	46·0

Industrial Disputes

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of working days lost because of industrial disputes in the six months to (a) December 1978 and (b) December 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: There were 380,000 working days lost as a result of industrial disputes in the six months to November 1991, the latest available period. This is a fraction of the 6 million working days lost in the six months to December 1978. There are fewer strikes now than there have been for more than half a century.

Business Statistics

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total number of (a) business start ups and (b) business failures in (i) Great Britain and (ii) each of the regions for the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Regional estimates of VAT registrations and deregistrations, for the years 1980 to 1990, were published in the November 1991 issue of the Employment Gazette, a copy of which is available in the Library.

These show clearly the sustained expansion of the small firms sector during the 1980s, in all regions of the country.

Training

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what budget is allocated for (a) employment training and (b) youth training respectively in each region of his training and enterprise and education directorate for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93; and what were the numbers of unemployed people in each of these regions at the latest available date.

Mr. Jackson: The budget allocations for 1991-92 for employment training and youth training in each region of the training enterprise and education directorate—TEED—are given in table (a). The figures for 1992-93 are still subject to negotiation and therefore not available.

The number of unemployed people in each of the TEED regions as at December 1991 are given in table (b).

Table (a)

£ million

England and Wales	YT	ET
South East	89·46	32·22
London	49·18	52·09
South West	65·28	25·18
West Midlands	84·50	48·71
East Midlands	96·58	39·94
Yorkshire and Humberside	91·40	52·80
North West	123·59	65·17
Northern	67·76	46·67
Wales	50·88	32·32

Note: ET budgets exclude national allowances (ie unemployment benefit + £10).

Unemployed claimants as at December 1991

TEED regions	Persons
South East	347,357
London	385,316
South West	190,128
West Midlands	246,987
East Midlands and Eastern	245,786
Yorkshire and Humberside	222,975

Sunday Trading

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will bring forward regulations to prohibit contracts of employment which require shop workers to work on Sunday; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We have no plans to do so.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security Forces (Compensation for Injuries)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list for each year since 1 January 1968 the sums paid in compensation for death and injury inflicted by members of the security forces where the victims were engaged in illegal or terrorist type activity at the time they suffered the injury or were killed; how many persons were paid compensation in each year; in how many of these cases the compensation was paid in out-of-court settlements before a court hearing; and in how many cases an award was granted by the court;

(2) if he will publish a table to show for each year since 1 January 1968 the number of applications for compensation for (a) injury, (b) death, inflicted by the security forces, (c) injury and (d) death resulting from activity by persons other than the security forces, in Northern Ireland for which compensation was refused because the injured party or parties had been involved in terrorist type activity.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Nursery Places

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many places in nursery schools and classes were provided by education and library boards in 1990-91 and 1991-92 in Northern Ireland; how many of these places were (a) full-time and (b) part-time; and what was the total number of full-time equivalent places provided.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of full-time equivalent places provided in controlled nursery schools and classes under the management of education and library boards in each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 was:

Nursery schools	Nursery classes
2,925	1,700

The number of pupils attending on a full-time or part-time basis is a matter for determination by the education and library boards and boards of governors. The 1991-92 statistics are not yet available, but in 1990-91 the number of pupils enrolled was as follows:

	Full-time	Part-time	Total
Controlled nursery schools	1,860	1,947	3,807
Controlled nursery classes	1,234	796	2,030

Harland and Wolff (Pension Surpluses)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the date prior to privatisation when the pensioners' trustees meeting agreed to pension surpluses being used to subsidise the building of ships by the new owners of Harland and Wolff; if he will publish the information on which this decision was based; whether a similar scheme has been considered with the privatisation of NIE; and what rights have previous members of the scheme who object to the course of action taken.

Mr. Needham: Pension fund moneys have never been used by the new owners of Harland and Wolff to subsidise the building of ships. The pension fund scheme remains unaffected by the privatisation arrangements and members continue to have the right to take up any relevant issues with the trustees. In relation to the Northern Ireland Electricity superannuation scheme, its committee of management and trustees have been given an assurance by the Government that pension scheme surplus will not be prejudiced by the privatisation process.

WALES

Employment Action

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the latest figures for (a) the number of employment action places provided and (b) the number of places filled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Contracts for employment action are not expressed in terms of places. The numbers of people in Wales receiving employment action allowances on 9 January, the latest date for which figures are available, was 600.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give his latest estimate of the drop-out rate for employment action in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: It is too early in the programme to do so.

Public Libraries

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which county or borough libraries he visited in 1989, 1990 and 1991; and if he will make a statement on his policies covering public libraries in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend's policies in relation to public libraries conform to his statutory responsibilities as defined in the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964. In pursuance of these duties, my officials have visited a number of public libraries in the last three years, but my right hon. Friend has not had occasion to do so.

Physically Handicapped People

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the Deeside physically handicapped club at the Melrose centre, Shotton.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policies concerning the physically handicapped and their social and physical needs.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Advice and guidance on services for people with physical and/or sensory disabilities was issued on 8 May 1990 to all local and health authorities in Wales, and on 7 November 1991 those authorities were sent further advice in the Welsh Office "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Physical Disability and Discomfort: Physical and Sensory Disability". Copies of both documents are in the Library of the House. Local and health authorities are required to take them carefully into account in the preparation of their social care plans and local strategies for health.

Bus Demonstration Projects

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to make funds available for bus demonstration projects in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A total of £0·5 million in supplementary credit approvals has now been made available to local authorities for 1992-93 to promote innovate bus priority schemes. This is additional to the capital provision for local authorities announced by my right hon. Friend on 11 December. Officials will be writing shortly to invite applications.

Bus priority schemes will also be considered during the next capital spend.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the sum of the precepts of the spending authorities on the collecting authorities in Wales in 1992-93, on the assumption that local authorities spend at their standard spending assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Precepts on collection funds in Wales assuming expenditure at standard spending assessment level and no drawings from reserves should be £257 million.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much he estimates will be raised from standard community charges on empty properties and second homes in Wales in 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The standard charge, with limited exceptions, is payable for properties which are no one's sole or main residence or have been unoccupied for more than six months.

The level of standard charge is determined by reference to the level of personal charge an authority sets for its area. In the main, these have not yet been set for 1992-93.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sum was ear-marked for allocation by his Department as the Welsh share of the central funding initiative for combating alcohol misuse; what sum has has (a) earmarked for each county in Wales, (b) granted to each county in Wales in respect of 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 and (c) how much was spent for each county in 1990-91; and how much has been spent so far in 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The initiative to combat alcohol misuse in Wales is independent of other campaigns and there is therefore no Welsh share. As part of this initiative a recurring amount of £150,000 was made available in 1990-91 and a further £150,000 was added in 1991-92, also recurring. Funds are not "earmarked" for each county; bids are considered on their merits. In 1990-91, the individual projects funded were as follows:

Title	Cost (£)
1. Drinkwise material	22,647·00
2. "Psst". Education video and supporting teachers packs for secondary schools	13,974·00
3. Rhoserchan Project—Rehabilitation centre	6,790·00
4. West Glamorgan Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse	568·00
5. Youthlink Wales	1,358·00
6. South Glamorgan Council on Alcoholism	15,156·00
7. Clwyd and Gwynedd Council on Alcohol	19,965·00
8. Ty Palmyra Rehabilitaion Centre, Gwent	1,623·00
9. Dyfed Alcohol Advisory Service	3,480·00
10. Alcohol Concern Wales	2,379·00
11. Rhythm and Booze Radio 1 Campaign Broadcast Support Service	3.500·00
Total cost	91,440·00

It is not possible to identify expenditure by county for 1991-92, as plans have yet to be finalised and grants claimed. In view of the delay, funds will be allocated to additional projects on a non-recurring basis. Forecast outturn is estimated to be around £230,000.

Patients (Referrals)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to fulfil ministerial assurances that contractual arrangements by health authorities in Wales will not interfere in the freedom of general practitioners and clinicians to refer patients to the most appropriate hospital and consultant.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I shall be issuing consolidated guidance on the management and operation of extra-contractual referrals later this month, and this will again emphasise the principle that GP's and other clinicians should be free, when necessary, to refer in the best interests of their patients.

Health authorities when setting contracts and establishing mechanisms for managing extra-contractual referrals are required to have as their objective the pattern of referrals which local clinicians and GPs prefer.

From this year, the annual performance review with the Department will be held jointly with district health authorities and family health service authorities so as to further enhance the partnership between primary and secondary care in the setting of contracts.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about difficulties and delays experienced when patients are referred by clinicians in Wales for treatment and its transpires that this must be done by means of extra-contractual referral.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department has recorded only one representation about delays or difficulties arising from extra-contractual referrals. Upon investigation, I was satisfied that the problems raised by the correspondent were not related to the extra-contractual referral process.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that all patients in Wales waiting for treatment will be counted in the appropriate Welsh Office statistics; and if he will instruct health authorities that any patients who are described as waiting to go on a waiting list or awaiting extra-contractual referral must be included in that authority's reports and any other published figures.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The monthly returns produced by district health authorities in respect of the treatments they secure for their residents, include statistics for all patients waiting for treatment, whether out-patient, in-patient or day case attendance, across all specialties. Health authorities are required to include extra-contractual referrals in the figures given. They do not operate a system involving people having to wait on one list before being eligible for entry on to another.

Health Service Resources

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has now reached decisions about the allocation of resources for hospital and community health and related services in Wales for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I announced on 28 November at columns 1081-1082 my decision on the allocation of resources for health and personal social services in Wales for 1992-93. Within the £1,877 million resources available, I propose to allocate on a provisional basis £1,420 million for the hospital and community health service and for the cash-limited element of the family health service in Wales. This sum, which is subject to parliamentary approval of the supply estimates, includes the full costs arising from the introduction of charging in respect of many of the services provided in England and Welsh patients. This represents a cash increase of £116·6 million, or 9 per cent. over 1991-92 estimated outturn provision. Of this sum, £54·5 million is to be made available for family health service authorities for their administration expenditure in 1992-93 and for the cash-limited element of the practice expenses of general medical practitioners and GP fundholders. The allocations to family health service authorities will be announced in the course of the next few weeks.

Excluding the cost of the artificial limb and appliance service, which is administered through a service level agreement between my Department and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, and other centrally financed services, £1,357·1 million will be provided for hospital and community health services—£1,228·7 million for current purposes and £128·4 million for capital spending.

For current spending, this represents a cash increase of £102·3 million or 9·1 per cent. over estimated outturn for the current year. This sum, together with the additional £13 million which it is anticipated authorities should, as a minimum, realise from further cash-releasing cost improvement savings and income generation schemes provide an effective increase in resources over 1991-92 of 10·2 per cent. £13·5 million of this sum will be allocated to fund the continuing and full-year cost of developments which are being funded centrally in 1991-92. £10·1 million will be allocated to other centrally funded developments which will be announced in due course.

The £78·7 million balance of the provision available will be made available for the discretionary use of district health authorities. This provides for a 7·0 per cent. increase in DHA's discretionary revenue provision in cash terms or 2·5 per cent. in real terms, taking account of the latest forecast of general inflation in 1992-93. In addition authorities will be expected to generate a further £13 million—that is, 1·1 per cent.—from new cash-releasing cost improvements and income generation schemes through their contracts with service providers.

Thus, in total, DHAs should benefit from a 3·6 per cent. real terms improvement in their purchasing power, exclusive of any reductions in unit costs that arise from productivity gains as throughput increases. As a consequence, authorities should be able to make substantial improvements in the services offered to patients in accordance with the objectives of the patients charter.

This increase in DHA revenue provision in 1992-93 is considerably in excess of the 0·5 per cent. per annum growth assumption which was used to calculate the figures given in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 21 March 1991 at columns 1081-82 regarding progress toward capitation shares. As a consequence, I am able to ensure that all DHAs in Wales will receive a minimum revenue cash increase of 6·5 per cent. in 1992-93, and that those which would otherwise be more than below their capitation formula targets will also receive the balance of growth funding in proportion to their respective distances from target.

The resulting discretionary revenue allocations for 1992-93 and the increases over their 1991-92 discretionary revenue provision in cash and percentage terms are shown in the table:

	Allocation	Cash increase
Clwyd	160·4	11·4	7·9
East Dyfed	97·9	6·9	7·6
Gwent	170·1	10·3	6·5
Gwynedd	96·6	7·2	8·2
Mid Glamorgan	217·4	13·1	6·5
Pembrokeshire	43·4	3·2	8·0
Powys	55·5	3·3	6·5
South Glamorgan	191·6	9·4	6·5
West Glamorgan	142·5	8·6	6·5

When authorities' estimated shares of the proceeds of capital charges are added to these calculations, each DHA's percentage share of gross discretionary revenue provision in 1992-93 by comparison with its capitation formula target, updated for estimated population changes is as follows:

	Gross Discretionary Revenue Provision Percentage	Capitation Formula Target Shares Percentage
Clwyd	13·8	14·3
East Dyfed	8·5	8·8
Gwent	15·7	15·2
Gwynedd	8·3	8·7
Mid Glamorgan	19·1	19·2
Pembrokeshire	3·8	3·9
Powys	4·7	4·1
South Glamorgan	13·5	13·0
West Glamorgan	12·6	12·8

Accordingly, the revenue planning assumptions for individual authorities in subsequent years which I gave in my answer of 21 March 1991 have been revised as in table 3:

Percentage growth on previous year for 1992-93 to 2001-02 assuming 0·5 per cent. growth

	1993-94	1994-95	1995-96	1996-97	1997-98	1998-99	1999-2000	2000-01	2001-02
Clwyd	1·27	1·10	1·10	1·10	1·09	1·09	0·45	0·45	0·45
East Dyfed	1·10	1·03	1·02	1·02	1·02	1·02	0·45	0·45	0·45

These growth planning assumptions assume that capital charges remain the same over the planning period. Although growth of 0·5 per cent. has been assumed on the recurring revenue total, this is exclusive of capital charges, and this becomes 0·45 per cent. when expressed as a percentage of the recurring revenue and the recycled capital charges combined.

I must stress that the figures in table 3 are for planning purposes only. They will be revised and rolled forward each year to take account of actual allocations. The redistribution of resources indicated by these figures will affect the purchasing positions of health authorities, but the provision of services will depend on where purchasers choose to place their contracts. The future of individual hospitals will therefore not always depend on the relative funding position of authorities in which they are located.

Under the new capital allocation arrangements which become effective on 1 April 1992, £97 million will be earmarked for the purposes of the all-Wales major capital programme. Further details of this programme will be announced in due course. £35 million will be made available for the discretionary capital requirements of DHAs and the new Pembrokeshire health trust, as well as the minor capital needs of various other service providers which are not managed by DHAs. This provision includes a sum of £3·4 million which is available as a result of authorities repaying brokerage loans from earlier years.

£1·7 million of this £35 million will be allocated in the form of additional revenue provision to the prospective pruchasers of the Pembrokeshire trust's services. It will thus form part of the trust's income for 1992-93 which can then be recapitalised to meet its capital requirements. The trust's capital expenditure will, however, also be subject to the external financing limit which I shall be issuing to the trust when its financial plan for next year has been updated to take account of the allocations to its prospective purchasers that are covered in this announcement.

A further £2 million will be held in reserve to meet the minor capital requirements of various other service providers such as the dental hospital, Breast Test Wales and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

The £31·3 million balance of capital provision will be allocated between the DHAs on behalf of their directly managed units; and in order to ensure the fair distribution of this sum between service providers, it will be allocated between authorities pro rata to the anticipated revenue income which their units will attract next year. In this way, minor capital provision, like revenue will "follow the patient".

The resulting capital allocations are set out in the following table. No allocation is shown for Pembrokeshire health authority because, when the Pembrokeshire trust comes into operation on 1 April, it will no longer be responsible for the capital needs of a directly managed unit. The trust's capital requirements will be met as previously noted.

In addition, property sales in 1992-93 are expected to generate a further £5·2 million and it is anticipated that authorities will benefit from £4·2 million of these receipts. In total, I expect authorities to achieve additional savings and to generate additional income amounting to at least 1·1 per cent. of their recurrent revenue allocations.

These allocations together represent another major increase in the provision for hospital, community and family health service. They once again underline the Government's commitment to the NHS and they underpin the assurances given about service availability and quality in the patients charter. They accord with the new resource allocation arrangements that flow from the NHS and Community Care Act and, in particular, make real progress toward weighted capitation funding. Indeed, they provide a secure basis on which to take forward the "Agenda for Action" which my Department recently published, and to which the NHS in Wales is fully committed. I am therefore sure they will be widely welcomed.

Council Home Sales

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what capital receipts have accrued since 1980 to each local authority in Wales from the sale of council houses; what proportion of these receipts in respect of Monmouth borough council have been invested in social housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 29 January 1992]: In-year capital receipts are shown in the table. Information on the proportion of these used to fund specific housing programmes is not held centrally.

Local Authority Capital Receipts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table for each region and each class of local authority in Wales, for housing capital receipts and other capital receipts, showing (a) total cash-backed capital receipts available to local authorities at 31 March 1990 and the amount of those receipts that were set aside as provision for credit liabilities, (b) the total of capital receipts received by local authorities in 1990-91 and the amount of those receipts set aside as provision for credit liabilities, (c) total capital receipts spent by Welsh local authorities in 1990-91, (d) the estimated total of capital receipts local authorities received in 1991-92 and the amount of those receipts that are likely to be set aside as provision for credit liabilities and (e) the estimated total of capital receipts spent on capital projects in 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 29 January 1992]: I have placed a copy of the information available in the Library of the House.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will require health authorities in Wales to include all patients awaiting treatment, including those awaiting extra-contractual arrangements, in their returns to the Welsh Office and ensure that such cases are included in the totals of figures published by his Department.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Welsh Office waiting list returns already require district health authorities in Wales to report information on all patients resident in their area, including those subject to extra-contractual referral.

ENVIRONMENT

MINIS

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the development of MINIS in his Department since its inception; and what proposals he has for its further development.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department is currently engaged on the 13th round of MINIS returns and reviews. Since I introduced the system in 1980, there have been many detailed changes over the years in the way material is collected and presented. In the early rounds, the emphasis was on establishing the full range of functions being undertaken within the Department and the staff and other costs related to each. The next stage of development was to include better defined aims, objectives and targets in order to clarify what was being achieved and to ensure that these achievements fully supported Government policies and priorities. The most recent developments have concentrated on making MINIS more useful as a system for top management and Ministers, which has entailed the development of supporting line management systems at all levels through the Department; and on considering the allocation of administrative resources alongside the setting of objectives and targets, to ensure that resources are in the right place to do the job.

MINIS returns are published after each round and a copy is placed in the Library of the House. Copies of MINIS 13 returns will be made available in the same way in due course.

Radon

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in exploring possibilities of an accreditation scheme for builders engaged in remedial work on radon, pursuant to his Department's response to the sixth report from the Select Committee on the Environment, Session 1990-91, into indoor pollution.

Mr. Baldry: Discussions with the National Radiological Protection Board and representatives of the building industry in the south-west have established that training and experience are essential prerequisites for developing any accreditation scheme. The Building Research Establishment is now arranging a series of training courses for builders and building professionals on radon remedial measures.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities on the need for supplementary credit allocations to deal with the possible roll-out of previous swaps deals; and what replies he has made.

Mr. Portillo: Two local authorities have asked my Department for supplementary credit approvals in respect of potential restitution payments on interest rate swaps. They have been told that it would be premature to consider such requests until the amounts involved can be estimated with reasonable certainty. They have also been told that, while requests for SCAs will be carefully considered, we do not have a reserve of resources for this purpose, so any additional allocations to one authority would be at the expense of others, or would require an increase in capital expenditure.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the sum of the precepts of the spending authorities on the collecting authorities in England in 1992-93, on the assumption that local authorities spend at their standard spending assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The sum of standard spending assessments for precepting authorities in England for 1992-93, on the basis of the reports laid before the House on 24 January, is £20,444·1 million.

Planning Applications

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to revise the criteria used in determining whether to call in planning applications under section 77 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to reflect the new priority being attached to development plans by section 54a of the 1990 Act, as inserted by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

Mr. Yeo: We have no plans to do so.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to require local planning authorities to determine whether planning applications are in accordance with the development plan before their determination.

Mr. Yeo: Authorities are already required by the Town and Country Planning (Development Plans) (England) Direction 1981 to take a view on whether planning applications depart from the development plan, to advertise any such application which they do not intend to refuse and to notify certain departures to the Secretary of State.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will amend the directions made under section 77 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to require the Secretary of State to be notified of planning applications which depart from the local plan as well as the structure plan and which the local planning authority do not intend to refuse.

Mr. Yeo: We are considering the need for a fresh direction. The basis for notifying applications which depart from development plans to the Secretary of State would be an important consideration in making such a direction.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer on 24 January, Official Report, columns 351-53, by what criteria he concluded that there is no case for statutory action in instances where there is evidence of a breach of statutory provisions.

Mr. Portillo: The Secretary of State's conclusion in relation to any case has regard to the circumstances of the case and to the balance of evidence.

Derelict Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 22 January, Official Report, column 309, what plans he has to continue the national register of vacant and public land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My Department's register is expected to remain in existence as long as my right hon. Friend's power to direct disposal is limited to sites entered on it. However, only sites for which the possibility of a direction is under consideration are being added to the register. For the longer term, as stated in our 1990 consultation paper "Encouraging The Use of Vacant Public Sector Land", it remains our intention to replace the national register with statutory owners' registers for all relevant public bodies.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 22 January, Official Report, column 309, what other measures, in addition to the requirement for local authorities to maintain and publish registers of their derelict or disused land, are being considered by his Department to address the problem of derelict or disused land in public ownership.

Mr. Yeo: We shall announce any further measures when we are ready.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 22 January, Official Report, column 309, how many local registers for derelict or disused land in public ownership there will now be in England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: A total of 430 local authorities in England will be required by the regulations to make available to the public at their principal offices registers of unused and underused land in their ownership. Under the 1989 code of practice, some 200 other local public bodies including health authorities and development corporations as well as Government Departments and other national public bodies are asked to provide similar registers. All bodies have been asked to deposit relevant extracts with district and London borough councils so that they can be made available locally.

Responsibility for land registers in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 22 January, Official Report, column 309, if he will make it his policy to require a six monthly return from local authorities to his Department, based upon their registers, reporting on the amount of derelict and disused land in public ownership in each local authority area.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities are required to make annual returns to my Department of aggregate information relating to their registers and other public sector owners have been requested to do so under the 1989 code of practice. I have no proposals for altering these arrangements.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 22 January, Official Report, column 309, what is the likely cost to local authorities of the scheme of local registration for derelict or disused land in public ownership.

Mr. Yeo: The extra cost to local authorities of maintaining registers of unused and underused land in their ownership is expected to be minimal. They should be recording this information themselves anyway in accordance with the 1989 code of practice and in the ordinary course of efficient property management.

Planning Policy

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will revise planning policy guidance note 1 to withdraw the general presumption in favour of development as it relates to the preparation of development plans.

Mr. Yeo: A draft revision of planning policy guidance note 1 was issued for consultation in October last year. The final version of this guidance will be published shortly in the light of the many responses we have received.

Lowland Peat Bogs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the lowland peat bogs at (a) Thorne moors, Yorkshire, (b) Hatfield moors, Yorkshire, (c) Fenns and Whixall moors, Shropshire and (d) Wedholme flow, Cumbria.

Mr. Baldry: The Department gave consent for the then Nature Conservancy Council to purchase the freehold and leasehold interests of Fens Whixall and Bettisfield mosses site of special scientific interest in 1990. Thorne and Hatfield moors, and Wedholme Flow are sites included in the recent announcement by English Nature and Fisons. The sites are being handed over to English Nature at no cost. All the areas where vegetation exists will be managed immediately for nature conservation purposes, and the remainder will be returned to nature conservation over a phased programme agreed between Fisons and English Nature.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if monitoring of ultraviolet radiation is carried out in the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office on Monday 3 February 1992 at column 11.

National Parks

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of each of the national parks in England are designated as environmentally sensitive areas; and what is the ESA acreage in each instance.

Mr. Baldry: Substantial parts of the existing Pennine dales, North Peak and the Broads ESAs fall within the Yorkshire Dales national park, the Peak District national park and the Broads Authority respectively. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's recent announcement of further ESA designations included areas in the Lake district, Peak district and Exmoor and Dartmoor national parks. Detailed work on the ESA boundaries to reflect the particular purposes of each new scheme is still underway. The precise proportion of new ESAs in national parks cannot be determined until their boundaries are set, and for existing areas the information can only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Revenue Support Grant (Bournemouth)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the revenue support grant 1992-93 for Bournemouth in 1991-92; and what account he has taken of the tourism factor.

Mr. Portillo: Bournemouth's revenue support grant for 1992-93 is £34·766 million, an increase of 20 per cent. over the comparable figure for 1991-92. The allowance for overnight visitors in the authority's standard spending assessment is £1·088 million, also an increase of 20 per cent. on this year's figure.

Local Government Commission (Guidance)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when, and with whom, he proposes to consult on the draft procedural guidance for the Local Government Commission to be issued under clause 15 of the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Portillo: The draft procedural guidance will be published shortly. The main consultation will be with the local authority associations, but we intend also to publicise the availability of the draft, and we shall, of course, be happy to consider comments on it from any interested individual or organisation. The draft will be placed in the Library of the House.

Solent Wetlands

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made with English Nature on designating the Solent wetlands and saltmarshes under the Ramsar convention.

Mr. Baldry: English Nature has identified the Solent marshes, together with Southampton water, as a potential Ramsar site, but they have not formally recommended designation to Government.

Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of state for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority respecting the provisional standard spending assessment and capping criteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority on his proposals for the 1992-93 local government finance settlement, nor during the consultation period did he receive any representations from the authority on these matters. My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister of State for the Home Office, met a delegation from the authority on 23 January 1992 to discuss their review of standards of fire cover.

My right hon. Friend laid the Revenue Support Grant Report (England) 1992-93 and associated reports before the House on Friday 24 January. The SSA for Merseyside fire and civil defence authority for 1992-93 is £45·859 million, an increase of 7·4 per cent. on 1991-92, and, as a result of changes in underlying data, £12,000 greater than the provisional SSA proposed on 26 November. The authority's SSA per adult (£44) is the highest of the metropolitan fire and civil defence authorities.

My right hon. Friend reaffirmed on 23 January that he remained minded to adopt as capping criteria the provisional criteria announced on 26 November. On the basis of these criteria, the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority could set a budget 7·4 per cent. higher than for 1991-92 without falling to be designated for capping.

Public Records

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals the Lord Chancellor has to maintain collections of public records currently held by county councils in the light of the proposed restructuring of local government; and whether he has sought comments from the Advisory Council on Public Records about this matter.

Mr. Portillo: In recommending any unitary authorities, the proposed Local Government Commission would have to be satisfied about the delivery of archive services. There will be ample opportunities for bodies concerned with archives to offer advice and comment on the commission's recommendations.

Minerals

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of the Town and Country Planning (Development Plan) Regulations 1991/2794 upon the ability of the mineral industry to supply the construction industry with the materials it needs.

Mr. Yeo: The statutory duty for all mineral planning authorities to prepare a minerals local plan will provide the mineral industry with an up-to-date planning framework which will assist with the continuing supply of minerals for the construction industry in an environmentally acceptable manner. The regulations set out the detailed requirements for the preparation of minerals and other development plans.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restraints he has placed upon district authorities to prevent them either deferring or overriding county mineral and waste disposal plans; and what mechanism he has provided for reconciling the conflict between county and district authorities on issues of importance to the mineral industry in discharging its role as supplier of aggregates.

Mr. Yeo: District local plans and minerals and waste local plans have to be in general conformity with the relevant structure plan. County planning authorities must be consulted on the preparation of district local plans and have the right to object to any policies or proposals of such plans. The Secretary of State has reserve powers to direct modification or to call in, all or part of a plan should that be necessary. The Town and Country Planning (Development Plan) Regulations 1991 provide that in the event of conflict between the provisions of a minerals or waste local plan on the one hand and a district local plan on the other, the provisions of the more recently adopted or approved plan prevail.

UN Conference on Environment and Development

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the proposals by the Environment, Public Health and Consumer Protection Committee of the European Parliament on European Communities' participation in the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Brazil in June; and what plans he has to work more closely with the European Parliament on environmental matters.

Mr. Baldry: The European Parliament's Environment, Public Health and Consumer Protection Committee last year presented an interesting report on the Community's participation in the UN Conference on Environment and Development. This report, sent to the Commission and member states, will be taken into account in the Community's preparations for UNCED. On future relations with the European Parliament, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 January at column 641.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 642, if he will publish tables based on the same criteria for the 1992-93 standard spending assessments which were laid before the House on 24 January.

Mr. Portillo: A table containing the information requested has been placed in the Library.

Water Treatment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning his consultations with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority regarding the implementation within the United Kingdom of the 1985 European Community municipal waste water treatment directive.

Mr. Baldry: The European Community's proposed municipal waste water treatment directive was adopted in May 1991 as the urban waste water treatment directive. The department has set up an advisory group to assist in the task of implementing the directive in the United Kingdom. The National Rivers Authority is represented on this group.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue guidance on the definition of sensitive waters for the purposes of the implementation in the United Kingdom of the 1985 European Community municipal waste water treatment directive.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 13 January 1992 at column 432.

Fuel and Power Industry Processes

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the remainder of the process guidance notes for the fuel and power industry processes prescribed under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will be available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am pleased to report that we have issued the chief inspector's guidance to inspectors for 16 processes in the fuel and power industry. These notes have been drawn up following completion of research reviews; and relevant industries and other bodies have been given the opportunity to put forward their comments. The notes will provide a sound framework within which inspectors can assess applications for the authorisation of new processes and existing processes. They represent a further stage in the introduction of integrated pollution control.

A set of the notes has been placed in the Library of the House.

The preparation of guidance notes for the remaining processes to come under control is well advanced. Further notes will be published in the next few months.

Preston Farm, Stockton on Tees

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department has had with the Teesside development corporation about Preston farm, Stockton on Tees.

Mr. Portillo: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement announced today that the defence quality assurance laboratories will not be relocating to Preston farm. This leaves the way open for a series of new developments on the site. The Teesside development corporation will be announcing the first of these today, a £7 million investment by Livera Foods plc. The new factory is expected to create up to 700 new jobs. In addition, it is expected that a further 100 jobs will be created by the company's suppliers, and the construction contracts for the new factory will employ about 80 people.

The development corporation has received a number of other inquiries about the possibility of development on the Preston farm site and hopes to be in the position to make further announcements shortly.

Renovation Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for renovation grant were successful in each year since 1979 (a) in England, (b) in Yorkshire and Humberside and (c) in each local authority in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Information about grants paid to private owners and tenants by local authorities are shown in the publication "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales". The relevant issue numbers are as follows:

Year	Issue number(s)
1979	53-55, 57
1980	57, 58, 61
1981	65
1982	69

Copies are in the Library.

Regional and national totals for 1979 and 1980 did not appear in this publication and for England are 65,359 grants paid in 1979 and 74,465 in 1980. The corresponding figures for Yorkshire and Humberside are 7,900 and 9,478 respectively.

The latest figures for 1990 and the first nine months of 1991 are as follows:

	Grants paid to private owners and tenants under (a) Housing Act 1985: 1990	(a) Housing Act 1985: first nine months 1991	(b) Local Government and Housing Act 1989: 1990	(b) Local Government and Housing Act 1989: first nine months 1991

Management Agreements

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the number of management agreements under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 which have been entered into in (a) national nature reserves and (b) sites of special scientific interest for each year since 1981 in England; and whether the proposed damage in each case was due to (i) agriculture or (ii) forestry; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the number of management agreements that have been entered into in England under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 where payments have been given in the following ranges (a) up to £9,999, (b) £10,000 to £19,999, (c) £20,000 to £29,000, (d) £30,000 to £39,999, (e) £40,000 to £49,999, (f) £50,000 to £59,999 and (g) over £60,000;

(3) if he will list (a) the ten sites of special scientific interest and (b) the ten national nature reserves in England which have the most expensive management agreements giving the name of the site, county in which it is located and the amount which has been or is due to be paid out; if the landowners are required to positively enhance the site as part of the conditions of payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Few management agreements under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 have been negotiated on national nature reserves, as these are mainly already under sympathetic management and the payments are negligible compared with payments on the agreements on sites of special scientific interest which follow.

Management agreements entered into in England under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 on sites of special scientific interest still active total 1,098.

Of these at least 61 arose from proposed damage arising from forestry. A further 1,037 arose from other proposed damage, mainly from agriculture.

The approximate number of agreements entered into or renewed each year and which are still active are as follows.

FY	Number of threat cases	Number due to forestry	Number due to agriculture
1982-83	4	2	2
1983-84	8	3	5
1984-85	16	1	15
1985-86	25	2	23
1986-87	49	5	44
1987-88	57	2	55
1988-89	63	3	60
1989-90	247	15	232
1990-91	257	14	243
1991-92	372	14	358
Total	1,098	61	1,037

Agreements which have expired and those renewed at present are not included.

Payments have been made as follows under the 1,098 management agreements entered into England under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. This covers currently existing agreements but not those that have expired.

1,098 agreements

	Number of cases with capital costs	Number of cases with annual payments
Less than 9,999	139	946
10,000—19,999	18	20
20,000—29,999	3	8
30,000—39,999	5	8
40,000—49,999	3	2
50,000—59,999	0	0
Greater than 60,000	5	3
Total	173	987

A few have both capital payment (lump sum) and an annual payment.

Details of management agreement payments are confidential between English Nature and the owner or occupier of land, and cannot therefore be provided.

Development Plans

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations and local authorities he has met to discuss the provisions of the Town and Country Planning (Development Plans) Regulations 1991; what cost assessment has been made for local authorities and the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Proposals for the regulations were issued for consultation, together with a draft of planning policy guidance on the new development plans system. About 1,000 copies were sent out, and some 170 responses were received. A list of responses has been placed in the Library. Ministers have not met any local authorities or other organisations to discuss the provisions of the regulations.

We do not expect the new regulations to have any significant extra cost implications for local authorities or other organisations, because they largely rationalise and standardise the arrangements for development plans contained in existing regulations on structure plans, local plans and unitary development plans.

Empty Council Homes

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 20 local authorities which have the highest proportion of empty council homes.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 20 local authorities which have the largest number of empty council homes.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities reporting the highest percentage of their stock empty in their housing investment programme returns for April 1991 were: Liverpool, Manchester, Salford, Burnley, Brent, Hackney, Tower Hamlets, Knowsley, Newcastle upon Tyne, Wolverhampton, Easington, Southwark, Newham, Carlisle, Oldham, Sheffield, North Tyneside, Sunderland, Stockton-on-Tees and Rother. Other authorities have higher numbers of empty houses and flats than some in this list but when account is taken of the size of stock their percentage vacancy rates are lower.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wages Board

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to (a) modify or (b) abolish the agricultural wages board.

Mr. Curry: None.

Calves

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many calves have been exported from the United Kingdom in each year from 1987 until the present.

Mr. Maclean: The numbers of calves exported from the United Kingdom in each year from 1987 as shown by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise overseas trade statistics are:

	Numbers
1987	373,205
1988	248,788
1989	319,301
1990	345,800
1991[1]	364,637

[1] To end of November.

Veal Crates

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has made to European Community institutions seeking the abolition of the veal crate.

Mr. Maclean: In negotiations leading to the recently adopted directive on the welfare of calves, the United Kingdom pressed most strongly for a European ban on veal crates. However, this was unacceptable to some member states and the directive, adopted by majority vote, does not impose a ban. The United Kingdom was the only member state to vote against the proposal.

Hydatidosis

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated annual financial loss to the farming and food industries attributable to hydatidosis.

Mr. Maclean: Returns received from a sample of slaughterhouses indicate that approximately 2 per cent. of cattle and 0·2 per cent. of sheep slaughtered in 1990-91 were affected with hydatidosis. However, this information is far from comprehensive and would not allow an estimate to be made of annual financial losses to the food and farming industries attributable to this condition.

ESAs

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will give estimates of the numbers of farmers eligible for the environmentally sensitive area scheme in the Pennine dales, including those announced in his 15 January statement, giving the numbers for each of the 18 eligible dales;

(2) if he will give estimates of the numbers of farmers eligible to benefit from the environmentally sensitive areas schemes already in existence as well as those eligible in his recent announcements, giving the numbers in each individual area.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to determine accurately the numbers of farmers eligible to enter the ESA schemes because the boundaries of the schemes do not coincide with parish boundaries in respect of which such data might be obtained from the agricultural census. There are currently 3,105 agreements in the 10 English ESAs, of which 303 are in the Pennine dales ESA. With the enlargement of some of the existing ESAs and the designation of 12 new ones, the number of agreements is expected to increase considerably but it is not possible to make an overall estimate until completion of the review of those environmentally sensitive areas designated in 1988 and determination of the boundaries for the 12 new areas to be introduced this year and in 1993.

Sea Trout

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantities of sea trout were imported in 1991; and what tariffs were applied to non-EC imports.

Mr. Curry: Information on sea trout cannot be distinguished from import figures for all trout. For 1991, figures for trout are available from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise up to the end of August, when 660 tonnes had been imported from EC partners and 108 tonnes from third countries. For the period September to December 1990, the comparable figures were 654 tonnes and 138 tonnes.

The general import duty rate applicable is 12 per cent. except for smoked trout for which the figure is 14 per cent.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has made or plans to make regarding the possible effects of exposure to ultraviolet light on fisheries in the waters around the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, has responsibility for such matters in relation to the Falkland Islands.

HEALTH

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the total value of prescriptions which have been dispensed in each family health services authority area, and in NHS regions in the last five years (b) the average cost of each prescription and (c) the cost of prescriptions dispensed per head of population for the same areas and periods.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Dentists

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists are registered and how many are practising in each health authority; and how many new or returning entrants there have been in each of the last three years.

Mr. Dorrell: At the end of 1990 there were 26,320 dentists registered in the United Kingdom with the General Dental Council. The numbers of dentists practising in each regional health authority (RHA) in England at 30 September 1990 are shown in the table:

Regional Health Authority	General Dental Services (GDS)	Hospital Dental Service (HDS)	Community Dental Service (CDS)
Northern	869	149	109
Yorkshire	1,094	120	111
Trent	1,218	167	115
East Anglia	605	70	61
North West Thames	1,512	96	144
North East Thames	1,226	207	111
South East Thames	1,341	285	118
South West Thames	1,240	118	107
Wessex	949	113	124
Oxford	826	66	80
South Western	1,209	161	92
West Midlands	1,395	218	182
Mersey	764	100	87
North Western	1,232	160	156
Total	15,480	2,030	1,597

Note: There may be some duplication in the numbers of dentists practising, as dentists can practise concurrently in the GDS, HDS and CDS.

The numbers of new or returning entrants in each of the last three years are for 1988, 1,409; for 1989, 1,453 and for 1990, 1,581.

Growth Hormone Therapy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on general practitioner prescribed hormone therapy in each national health service region in 1990; and if he will express that sum as a figure of expenditure per head of children under 16 years of age in each national health service region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information relating to growth hormone therapy is set out in the table.

Expenditure on Growth Hormone Therapy in 1990—England[1]

Regional Health Authority	Net ingredient cost (NIC)[2] (£000)	Cost per child under 16 (pence)
Northern	96·1	15·6
Yorkshire	854·1	114·3
Trent	432·2	46·2
East Anglia	31·2	7·5
North West Thames	1,837·7	261·0
North East Thames	777·5	101·5
South East Thames	520·0	72·9
South West Thames	162·0	28·7
Wessex	718·1	125·9
Oxford	963·9	177·8
South Western	944·9	151·9
West Midlands	178·0	16·6
Mersey	382·8	77·3
North Western	1,238·8	148·7
England	9,137·3	95·2

[1] The data are estimates based on a sample of 1 in 200 prescriptions dispensed by chemists.

[2] The Net ingredient cost is the basic cost of drugs before discount and does not include the dispensing costs or fees.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total sums expended on general practitioners prescribed growth hormone therapy in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is set out in the table.

Total Net Ingredient Cost[1] on Growth Hormone Therapy—England 1986 to 1990[2]

Year	NIC (£000)
1986	1,190·2
1987	2,229·0
1988	4,622·8
1989	8,875·0
1990	9,137·3

[1] The Net Ingredient Cost is the basic cost of drugs before discount and does not include the dispensing costs or fees.

[2] The data relate to calendar years and are estimates based on a sample of 1 in 200 prescriptions dispensed by chemists. No prescriptions were dispensed in 1985 for growth hormone therapy.

Fresh Fruit (Cariogenicity)

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1991, Official Report, column 54, if he will give references to the epidemiological evidence that suggests that fresh fruit appears to be low in cariogenicity.

Mr. Dorrell: The Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) Report, "Dietary Sugars and Human Disease" (1989) shows reference to Rugg-Gunn A. J. "Starchy foods and fresh fruit: their relevant importance as a source of dental caries in Britain, London: Health Education Council, 1986 (occasional paper; No. 3)" as included in its consideration of the cariogenicity of fresh fruit as eaten by humans.

Macfarlane Trust

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what payments have been made, and on what dates, to the Macfarlane Trust to help those infected with HIV; and what proposals he has to keep this fund topped up to meet future needs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A payment of £10 million was made to the Macfarlane Trust on 16 March 1988. Payments have been made to the trust annually in respect of its administrative costs. The Government have made it clear that the amounts available to the trust would be kept under review.

Employment (Learning Difficulties)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the Welsh initiative for specialised employment on the effect of residential costs on the livelihood of people with learning difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

District Nurses

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by health authority the number of full-time equivalent district nursing posts and the number of potentially elderly domiciliary clients, as defined by the Department of the Environment under section 80 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, for 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available.

Transport Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide details of current Department sponsored research (a) as to the links between transport pollution and health and (b) the reported growth in incidents of asthma in children.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is not currently supporting any such research.

Homeopathic Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of an item of homeopathic medicine on the national health service and the corresponding figure for its conventional counterpart.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available in the form requested.

Acute Patients

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of days patients in acute wards spent in hospital in each year from 1987 to the present in (a) Yorkshire health authority and (b) Scunthorpe district health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The information available centrally is given in the table.

Mean duration of stay in days of ordinary admissions to acute sector beds in NHS hospitals

Year	Yorkshire region	Scunthorpe district
1987-88	6·3	4·7
1988-89	5·8	4·4
1989-90	5·0	4·3

Mentally Disordered (Press Coverage)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he received a copy of the Matthew trust report on the Press Complaints Commission and BBC regarding media coverage of the mentally disordered and distressed; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We received a copy of the report on 15 January 1992. The specific issues which the report raises about the Press Complaints Commission's code of practice and the editorial policy of the BBC are primarily a matter for those bodies.

We have asked the chairman of the Special Hospitals Service Authority to investigate the complaints in the report alleging breach of confidentiality and to take any necessary action.

Southern Derbyshire Health Authority

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give figures for the real-terms change in spending by the Southern Derbyshire health authority since 1982.

Mr. Dorrell: The annual accounts of the Southern Derbyshire health authority record total revenue expenditure of £74·9 million (cash) for 1982-83 and £132·9 million (cash) for 1990-91. This represents an increase in real terms of some 14·1 per cent. measured at 1991-92 prices. Over this period in-patient and day cases activity on a comparable basis has increased by 31 per cent.

Fluoride

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures exist to ensure that water fluoridation is introduced only where there is clear public support for such a measure.

Mr. Dorrell: It is for district health authorities to make decisions to apply to water undertakers to increase the fluoride content in the drinking water supplied by them. Section 89 of the Water Industry Act 1991 lays down procedures to be followed by district health authorities. The procedures include wide publication of proposals and consulting each of the local authorities whose areas are involved.

SCOTLAND

Primary School Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost of Scottish Education Department officials attending public meetings in Scotland in support of national testing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: About £160.

Construction Projects

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those construction projects undertaken by the Scottish Office in conjunction with the private sector since 1979, and subject to a local planning inquiry, which involved the formal conclusion of a joint commercial contract in advance of the construction of the local planning inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1992]: No joint commercial contracts for the execution of Scottish Office construction projects subject to public local inquiry have been entered into since 1979 except in the case of proposals for the Skye bridge. This is the first project to be advanced using procedures in the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 (the relevant sections of which came into force on 21 October 1991) that envisage the signing of a contract in advance of any public local inquiry that may be held. However, execution is still conditional on the outcome of the inquiry.

School Crossing Patrols

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what criteria are recommended by his Department for use by regional and islands councils when deciding to establish school crossing patrols;

(2) if he will publish the number of existing school crossing patrols per 1,000 head of school population for each relevant local authority in Scotland;

(3) what guidance is given to local authorities about steps to be taken when school crossing patrols are withdrawn.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Section 26 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 enables regional and islands councils in Scotland to provide school crossing patrols. Guidance on the establishment of school crossing patrols is contained in technical memorandum SH7/87 issued to regional and islands councils by the Scottish Office in December 1987 after consultation with local authorities and the police. The guidance does not specifically deal with the withdrawal of particular crossing patrols.

Information about the number of school crossing patrols per head of school population is not held centrally.

Nursery Care

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide an estimate of the money spent by the education authorities in Scotland in 1990-91 and 1991-92 on providing education and nursery care for three and four-year-olds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 February 1992]: The latest available figures for net revenue expenditure by local authorities in Scotland on nursery education and day nurseries are:

	1989-90	1990-91
Nursery Education	39·7	45·2
Day Nurseries	11·8	[1]13·5

[1] provisional

Expenditure on provision for three and four-year-olds specifically is not available.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the average length of time involved between the conclusion of a local public inquiry into a planning matter and (a) the submission to him of the reporter's recommendations and (b) his public response to the reporter's recommendations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 February 1992]: The length of time varies, but it usually takes about three weeks of reporting time for each week of inquiry. If parties request the right to comment on part I of the report, that consultation process can add four weeks to the time taken to submit the completed report to my right hon. Friend.

During the year to 31 March 1991, the average time which elapsed between submission of the report to my right hon. Friend and the issue of his decision was 14 weeks. In the current year the average time taken to decision is 10 weeks.

DEFENCE

Kirkcudbright Range

12. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning irregularities at the Kirkcudbright range.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None—other than those from the hon. Member.

Procurement

13. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the amount of procurement orders placed with United Kingdom companies by his Department over the last two years.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the financial year 1989-90 we placed some 122,000 contracts, valued at £5·9 billion; and for 1990-91, about 90,000 valued at £6·3 billion.

19. Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with industrialists in the defence sector regarding the release of information on his long-term procurement plans.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly meet defence industrialists to dicuss a wide range of issues. Subject to necessary constraints of security and confidentiality, we would always wish companies to be briefed as fully as possible on future requirements in which they may have an interest.

AWE Aldermaston

14. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on safety at the atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We place the highest priority on safety at Aldermaston. The establishment has an excellent safety record and the highest standards will continue to apply.

"Options for Change"

15. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the impact of proposals and decisions arising from "Options for Change" on defence establishments and defence-related enterprises within the Plymouth travel-to-work area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made it clear that we will continue to base Royal naval ships at Devonport. As part of our policy of matching training and support to the smaller front line, weapons processing will end at Royal naval armaments depot, Ernesettle and RAF Mountbatten will close. The effect on defence-related enterprises has to be a matter for the management of the companies concerned.

Helicopter Maintenance

16. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence is he can give details of the inquiry into tri-service third-line helicopter maintenance facilities; and if he will make a statement on the impact the report has concerning the future of the royal naval aircraft workshops, Almondbank, Perthshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The inquiry was a wide ranging efficiency scrutiny of helicopter repair work. I cannot say what implications the report might have for staff at RNAW Almondbank until its recommendations have been properly considered. But I can assure my hon. Friend that I fully recognise the skill and loyalty of the Almondbank work force.

RAF Fylingdales

17. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will pay an official visit to RAF Fylingdales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend currently has no plans to do so, but I visited Fylingdales last March.

"Options for Change"

18. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the progress of the "Options for Change" programme in relation to the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The measures affecting the Army are being brought into effect in a phased manner over the next few years in accordance with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence's announcement of 23 July 1991.

Confidence-building Measures

20. Sir Patrick Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet Marshal Yevgeny Shaposhnikov, Defence Minister of the Commonwealth of Independent States to discuss confidence-building measures.

Mr. Tom King: I met Marshal Shaposhnikov on 30 January when he accompanied President Yeltsin on a visit to London. We discussed a wide range of subjects of mutual interest, including ways in which the United Kingdom might provide assistance in the fields of nuclear weapons disposal and defence management.

Nuclear Deterrent

21. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure the effectiveness of Her Majesty's Government's nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government are proceeding with plans to replace Polaris with Trident and intends in due course to update Britain's sub-strategic nuclear capability. Taken together, these measures will ensure that our independent nuclear deterrent remains credible and effective well into the next century.

Submarines

22. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met representatives of the fishing industry to discuss submarine activities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence I met fishing industry representatives to discuss submarine issues in June 1991. In addition I discussed the same issues with an all-party group of MPs in November 1991.

Nuclear Weapons

23. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the change in the level of the threat to the United Kingdom posed by nuclear weapons in the former Soviet republics since the collapse of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Tom King: The threat of nuclear confrontation in Europe has greatly reduced: but it will take many years to reduce the huge nuclear arsenal of the former Soviet Union, and the Commonwealth of Independent States faces an uncertain future and there are risks of nuclear proliferation elsewhere. The Government will therefore maintain an effective, minimum deterrent.

Small Arms Firing Ranges

24. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to publish the guidelines for the construction of small arms firing ranges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to publish any such guidelines. Broad technical advice on range safety (including range construction) is however provided to civilian shooting clubs through the National Rifle Association and the National Small-Bore Rifle Association.

Household Division

25. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding his proposed cuts in the public duties of the Household Division.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received a number of representations regarding the execution of public duties by the Household Division all of which have been noted.

Queen Victoria School, Dunblane

26. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what support his Department gives to the Queen Victoria school, Dunblane, for the education of the sons of people serving in the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Queen Victoria school, Dunblane is funded almost entirely from Ministry of Defence votes.

HMS Endurance

27. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the disposal of the ship's bell belonging to HMS Endurance.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The bell from HMS Endurance is at present held at HM naval base Portsmouth. Applications for the bell have been received from a number of interested parties but no firm decision has yet been made about its future.

Training Land

28. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review is presently taking place of the need to retain all current training land in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the planned restructuring of our Armed Forces will mainly result in a reduction in the number of units based in Germany, the need for training land in the United Kingdom is unlikely to diminish. Indeed, it could marginally increase. A number of studies are in progress aimed at setting out our future training requirements including frequency, priority, duration and space and at matching these requirements with our available training facilities. The precise impact of these studies on existing training areas and ranges is not yet clear.

Iraq (Military Equipment)

29. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what analysis his Department has made of the effectiveness of the military equipment available to Iraq during the Gulf war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The equipment of the Iraqi armed forces included a wide range of systems of varying age, origin and effectiveness. Examination of recovered equipment in collaboration with the allies is still in progress.

Iraq (UN Inspection)

30. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the findings of the United Nations team investigating production facilities and stockpiles of mass destruction weapons in Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The findings of the United Nations special commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency investigating Iraq's compliance with United Nations Security Council resolution 687 were last circulated in United Nations document S/23268 of 4 December 1991, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The United Nations special commission is still far from satisfied that Iraq h[illegible] provided all the information required by SCR 687. A report reflecting the Secretary-General's latest assessments of Iraqi compliance will shortly be circulated as a United Nations document; a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Quality Assurance Laboratory Services

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has completed his studies into the future of his Department's quality assurance laboratory services.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department announced on 6 August 1991 that "Options for Change" reductions had made it necessary to review the plan announced in 1989, to relocate the Ministry of Defence's quality assurance staff at the Preston farm site on Teesside. A study was set in hand to compare the costs and benefits of that course with the alternative option of merging the quality assurance laboratory services with those of the Defence Research Agency on sites operated by the latter.

The study has now been completed. The impact of reductions in the defence programme for the 1990s is such that the most economical and operationally effective way ahead for the quality assurance technical support division is for it to be dispersed and consolidated into the Defence Research Agency, which will have considerable spare capacity on its existing sites. This will result in capital savings of more than £40 million and running costs savings rising to £9 million a year.

The Ministry of Defence has therefore been able to release the site at Preston farm which will be available, through the Teesside development corporation, for commercial development. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment is today making an announcement about future developments on the site.

Hunting

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisations and individuals he has consulted in the past 18 months regarding nature conservation on Ministry of Defence land where licences are issued to allow foxhunting and deerhunting.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence consults the local MOD conservation group where hunting licences cover an area with a nature conservation interest and it is designated as a site of special scientific interest. These groups consist of individuals and organisations representing the specific conservation interests of a particular site.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 185, when the fees payable by fox hunts for licences to hunt on Ministry of Defence land were last increased.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The hunting licences where fees are payable were last increased in 1988.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 186, if he will publish the regulations or codes of good conduct attached to or relating to licences issued to hunt on Ministry of Defence land.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Hunts are expected to abide by the respective codes of conduct of the recognised hunting organisations. It is not possible to give details of the regulations applying to each licence as each one is different depending on the establishment concerned and its usage.

Trident

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the United States decision to cancel production of W88 warheads for multiple-warhead nuclear missiles will have on the Royal Navy's Trident programme; whether W76 warheads of the type that are now to be used in United States Navy strategic submarines are compatible with and available for use in British SSBN boats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom's Trident system will use warheads which have been designed, and are being manufactured, in the United Kingdom. The United States decision will not, therefore, affect the United Kingdom Trident programme.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now review the requirement for Trident following the cancellation of the Trident warhead production programme in the United States.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. Trident is essential if the United Kingdom is to maintain an effective and credible nuclear deterrent into the next century.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now make it his practice to release information on (a) the Trident programme and (b) the date on which he will order the SSN 20; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence made a statement on the Trident programme earlier today. On the SSN20 order, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman on 29 November 1991 at column 684.

Defence Budget

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has plans to make any further savings in the defence budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's future intentions for defence expenditure are set out in the 1991 Autumn Statement and provide funding for the new force structure described in the Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1991 (Cm 1559). There are no plans to change these forecasts.

Iraq

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart regarding the export of equipment to Iraq by the firm Terex.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the ability of the Iraqi Government to convert civil equipment into Scud missile launchers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Scud launcher production is subject to United Nations monitoring under Security Council resolution 687, which calls for both the elimination of launchers themselves and of the associated production capability. Although Iraq assembled fixed and mobile launchers for its longer range Scud missiles before the Gulf conflict, it would face some difficulty in converting civil equipment to this purpose. Such equipment would need to be of correct specification which may not be readily available in Iraq and which would be hard to obtain under the current United Nations economic sanctions.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the military significance of equipment exported to Iraq by the firm Terex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has noted recent allegations in the press and is looking into the matter together with the Department of Trade and Industry. But I am not at present aware of any exports of military equipment to Iraq by Terex.

Operation Granby

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes to his policy of chartering merchant vessels have been made as a result of Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Pending the outcome of current work within the Department, no changes have been made.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the MoD police fraud squad is investigating the alleged fraud in the chartering of merchant vessels to support Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Ministerial Speeches

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department keeps centralised records of all speeches and media interviews given by departmental Ministers speaking in areas of departmental responsibility.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

ENERGY

Fuel Exports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide a breakdown of the figures underlying the figures for net exports of fuel in 1991 given in his press notice of 27 January; and if he will indicate how imported electricity from France is treated in the calculation.

Mr. Wakeham [holding answer 3 February 1992]: The convention used in the balance of payments, when comparing imports and exports, is to record figures on an "f.o.b. basis" (i.e. free on board). The figures used in the Department's press notice of 27 January are consistent with the balance of payments figures published by the Central Statistical Office on the same day. Figures on electricity imports are included and were obtained from Customs and Excise data in the same way as those for other fuels. Figures for 1991 are as follows:

	£ million	£ million	£ million	£ million	£ million	£ million
Imports (f.o.b.)	n/a	3,698	n/a	n/a	n/a	7,064
Exports (f.o.b.)	98	4,440	2,630	—	—	7,168
Net exports (f.o.b.)	n/a	742	n/a	n/a	n/a	104

n/a Figures on an f.o.b. basis are not available separately for fuel categories other than oil.
— Less than £0·5 million.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Council Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if there are any plans under the council tax benefit scheme to alter the position of the groups currently exempt from deductions for non-dependents; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The proposed system of non-dependent deductions in council tax benefit will follow broadly the rules which apply in housing benefit. However, exemption from deductions will be extended to include non-dependents on income support, or those who would otherwise give rise to a discount.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated number of disability working allowance claimants in 1992-93 who will be liable to pay income tax.

Mr. Scott: Disability working allowance is a new tax-free benefit to be introduced from April this year. It is not possible to estimate the number of disability working allowance recipients who will be liable to pay income tax on other income in 1992-93.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated administrative cost of disability working allowance for 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability working allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

State Benefits (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many south Yorkshire families were dependent on state benefits in 1979, 1990 and the latest available date in 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

European Year of Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department is making for the European year of elderly people and solidarity between the generations in 1993.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health, has lead responsibility in this area, and I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, on 3 February.

Housing Benefit

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many housing benefit applications were determined by each local authority in Northamptonshire in each year since 1980-81.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is as follows:

Number of Housing Benefit Claims Received

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Corby	4,714	10,652	13,293
Daventry	2,607	3,639	8,246
East Northampton	7,882	11,138	7,309
Kettering	10,131	9,722	8,509
Northampton	5,558	n.a.	10,208
South Northants	n.a.	n.a.	2,793
Wellingborough	n.a.	n.a.	10,725

Notes:

(i) n.a. = information not available.
(ii) Data is not available for years prior to 1988-89.
(iii) Unsuccessful applications are included in these figures.
(iv) Information on the determination of applications is not collected.
(v) Source: Housing Benefit Management Information System.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many housing benefit review boards heard cases in each of the years 1989, 1990, and 1991, respectively; how many were decided in the claimants' favour and how many claimants were represented.

Miss Widdecombe: Information for calender years is not available, however, the housing benefit and community charge benefit management information system suggests that, in 1989-90, approximately 3,000 requests for a further review by a review board were reported, of which, about 700 resulted in a revised determination.

In 1990-91, approximately 3,000 such requests were reported, of which, about 500 resulted in a revised determination.

Data as to the number of review boards decided in the claimants' favour and claimant representation are not available.

Mobility and Attendance Allowance

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the numbers of (a) initial claims and (b) renewal claims for mobility allowance and attendance allowance in 1991; how many were (i) refused and (ii) refused but later awarded on review.

Mr. Scott: In 1991, there were 231,000 initial and 45,000 renewal claims for mobility allowance. 120,000 claims were unsuccessful. 11,000 awards were made following a review.

There were 539,000 initial and subsequent claims to attendance allowances. 108,000 claims were unsuccessful. Complete information is not available about renewal claims to attendance allowance, although of some 45,000 processed by regionally located disability benefit centres, the majority resulted in an award. Information is not available about the success rate, on review, of unsuccessful initial and renewal claims.

Notes:

1. Claims for both mobility allowance and attendance allowance which were received in 1991 were not necessarily processed in that year.

2. Generally a renewal claim is one which is made on an existing limited period award to extend that award, but a subsequent claim is one made following disallowance of an earlier claim or sometime after a previous award has lapsed.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the reasons for refusing attendance allowance during the 12 months to December 1991 where (a) an initial claim was refused and (b) an existing claim was withdrawn; and how many claimants were affected in each category.

Mr. Scott: Such information as is available is in the tables.

Initial claim refused

	Number
Medical criteria not satisfied	107,678
Constant attendance allowance total overlap	10
Residence and presence tests not satisfied	77
	107,765

Existing claim withdrawn (by claimant or third party)

	Number
Deceased	8,561
Other reasons[1]	5,832
	14,393

[1] A detailed breakdown of this figure is not available.

Pensions

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the extra cost of increasing the state pension to £110 per week for a single person and £220 per week for a couple expressed as (i) total national cost and (ii) per contributor and (b) the corresponding reduction in the cost of housing benefit payments and income support payments if the pension figures in (a) were introduced.

Miss Widdecombe: The extra cost to the national insurance fund of increasing the basic state retirement pension to £110 per week and £220 for a married couple in 1991-92 would be £30·4 billion. The corresponding reduction in the combined cost of income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit would be £3·1 billion

The combined extra weekly cost of this change in national insurance contributions for a man on average earnings and his employer would be £39·50 per week.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the areas where the cold weather payments have so far been paid in 1992; and also the number of areas where such payments have not been paid.

Mr. Scott: Such information as is available is in the Library.

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action is required to establish that an applicant for a national insurance number is properly resident in the United Kingdom and is so entitled; and if he will make a statement on the enforcement of these conditions.

Mr. Jack: On receipt of an application for a national insurance number we require acceptable and verifiable evidence of identification. This could include a birth certificate, a passport or a Home Office immigration form. The Home Office is informed in any case where a passport indicates that there is a restriction on taking up employment in the United Kingdom or where there is a limit on length of stay which has expired, or is about to expire.

Questions on residence are matters for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated total amount payable to personal pension schemes from the national insurance fund in respect of the year 1991-92; and what increase in the basic retirement pension could be given at the same cost.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 24 January 1992]: By December 1991, 4·6 million people had taken out personal pensions as an alternative to remaining in SERPS. The Government Actuary estimates that the amount of revenue foregone by the national insurance fund in respect of 1991-92 will be £2,740 million made up of £2,055 million in respect of the contracted out rebate, similar to that available to contracted-out occupational pension schemes, and £685 million in respect of the additional 2 per cent. incentive.

This gross cost does not take into account the numbers of people who would join a contracted out occupational pension scheme if appropriate personal pensions were not available, nor does it take into account the future reduced burden of the national insurance fund brought about by people being in receipt of a personal pension rather than SERPS.

The gross sum referred to above would not, therefore, be available to fund increases in the basic retirement pension.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Malde Modhwadia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the letter dated 24 January from Mr. Noon, the solicitor to Mr. Malde Modhwadia; and when he will be in a position to award compensation.

Mr. John Patten: The application for compensation was received on 27 January. A decision will be reached as soon as possible.

British Legion Medals

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will authorise police officers to wear on their uniforms the national service medal issued by the Royal British Legion.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Police (Recorded Incidents)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the number of recorded incidents per uniformed police officer in (a) the Metropolitan police area, (b) Surrey and (c) the Northumbria police authority area in 1991.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available figures, in terms of notifiable offences recorded by the police, per police officer, in the 12 months to September 1991 are (a) 32 offences in the Metropolitan police area, (b) 30 offences in Surrey, and (c) 63 offences in Northumbria.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people have been employed by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board and in what capacity for the past 12 years;

(2) what are his future plans for funding the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board;

(3) how many claims the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board has dealt with on an annual basis, for the past 12 years;

(4) what has been the cost incurred by the operation of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board expressed annually, for the past 12 years.

Mr. John Patten: The available information for the last 12 financial years is shown in the table.

Financial Year	Number of staff employed by the Board (average in post during year)	Number of Board Members (including Chairman)	Number of applications resolved	Total compensation paid (£ millions)	Total administration costs (£ millions)
1979-80	156	18	21,113	15·7	1·9
1980-81	155	20	26,277	21·5	2·9
1981-82	163	20	22,557	21·9	3·2
1982-83	163	21	26,098	29·4	3·7
1983-84	182	20	29,705	32·8	3·8
1984-85	189	22	27,450	35·3	4·2
1985-86	203	29	29,965	41·5	4·4
1986-87	214	29	29,605	48·2	5·5
1987-88	267	31	29,150	52·1	6·8
1988-89	312	38	38,830	69·4	7·5
1989-90	332	39	38,620	72·7	9·1
1990-91	368	43	53,384	109·3	10·3
1991-92[1]	380	44	61,000	144·6	13·1

Most of the board's staff are seconded civil servants graded from administrative officer to higher executive officer, and engaged in the preparation of applications for decision by the board and associated administrative tasks. There are also small numbers of senior managers and legal and secretarial staff.

Plans for funding for the board for the next three years are as follows:

	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95
Compensation	143·5	157	161
Administration	15·3	17·4	17·4
Total provision	158·8	174·4	178·4

Polish People

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review immigration procedures for Polish people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As with other nationalities, Polish nationals must meet the requirements of the immigration rules for entry to the United Kingdom. In common with the citizens of 81 other countries or territorial entities, Polish nationals are subject to a United Kingdom visa requirement.

A recent review of the visa requirement has led my right hon. Friend to conclude that it is too soon to assess the experience of some of our European partners who have abolished visas for Polish nationals. My right hon. Friend has decided therefore to look once more at the need for this requirement in the summer when the impact of visa abolition on other member states of the Community may have become more apparent.

Immigrant Population (Funding)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total Government expenditure on funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for 1991-92, itemised by borough and district identifying for each borough and district the amount of expenditure; how much of that expenditure was for education itemised by borough and district; and how much was for each of the other service areas eligible for grant, itemised by borough and district.

Mrs. Rumbold: The figures for grant to be paid in 1991-92 are not yet available.

Convicted Criminals' Admissions (Northumbria)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Northumbria as to what proportion of the crime clear-up rate for 1990-91 in Northumbria is accounted for by voluntary admission made by convicted criminals; how many detectives were employed to obtain these admissions; and when the practice ceased.

Mr. John Patten: The available information, for 1990, shows that, of the 77,000 notifiable offences cleared up by the police in Northumbria, 29·4 per cent. were cleared up by an interview of convicted offenders in custody. It is estimated that the equivalent of 40 officers were engaged in such interviews. The practice ceased at the beginning of December 1991.

Caring for Children

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effect of the Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations 1991 on police practice on disclosure of criminal records.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police continue to disclose criminal records for the purpose of protecting children in accordance with Home Office circular 102/88. The regulations do not require a change of police practice.

Police, Hampshire

59. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase in the authorised establishment of police officers in Hampshire in each year since 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is set out in the table and is provided on the basis of financial years:

Year	Increase approved
1987-88	Nil
1988-89	23
1989-90	20
1990-91	25
1991-92	27
1992-93	67

Court Escort Service

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the standard of service which will be expected of a private sector company contracted to operate the court escort service in the area comprising the east midlands and Humberside.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Work has now been completed on the specification for the operation under private sector management of the court escort service in the east midlands and Humberside. This forms part of the invitation to tender being issued to potential contractors today and a copy has been placed in the library. Subject to the receipt of satisfactory tenders, and value for money considerations, we would aim to award a contract in the summer; with the service in the area becoming operational under a private sector contractor early next year.

Magistrates Courts (Fees)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to increase fees for civil proceedings in the magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: I have today laid before Parliament a draft order varying the fees now prescribed in part I of schedule 6 to the Magistrates Courts Act 1980. The increases proposed are in many cases substantial because the present fees have not been varied for a substantial number of years and fall far short of recovering the full economic costs of the services provided in accordance with general Government policy on fees and charges. It is our intention that the new fees should be kept under regular review in future to avoid the need for major variations of this kind.

We recognise the need to ensure that access to magistrates courts is not closed off for financial reasons, and the draft order therefore makes it clear that no fees are chargeable from any person who is a legally assisted person within the meaning of section 2(11) of the Legal Aid Act 1988 or is in receipt of income support or family credit. Nor do the new fees affect the discretion of magistrates courts to remit fees conferred by section 138 of the Magistrates Courts Act 1980 where they judge this to be appropriate.

We have also taken the opportunity to simplify the current schedule of fees and to abolish those which are no longer in general use.

ENVIRONMENT

Armstrong Bridge, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations he has given to the representations of Jesmond Residents Association, Newcastle upon Tyne, about the public safety considerations of a further postponement in the restoration of the listed structure known as the Armstrong bridge.

Mr. Yeo: The Department's northern regional office has asked Newcastle city council, which owns the Armstrong bridge, for information about its current state of repair and its plans for carrying out work to it. Once the council's response has been received, consideration will be given as to whether intervention by the Secretary of State is necessary.

Housing Stock

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the councils which transferred their housing stock to new housing associations in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Yeo: In 1989-90, Newbury borough council and Swale borough council transferred their housing to new housing associations. In 1990-91, 11 councils completed transfers. These were

Broadland District Council
North Bedfordshire District Council
Medina Borough Council
Rochester City Council
South Wight Borough Council
East Dorset District Council
Tonbridge and Malling Borough Council
Ryedale District Council
South Bucks District Council
Christchurch Borough Council
Mid Sussex District Council

Housing Revenue

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many councils have been required to transfer funds from their housing revenue account to the general fund.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to the hon. Member for Sheffield Brightside, on 16 January 1991, Official Report, column 647.

Local Government (General Funds)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the highest amount paid by any council to the general fund in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo: The highest amount transferred by an English local housing authority from its housing revenue account to its general rate fund in 1989-90 was £30,023,050 by Rochester upon Medway city council. The highest amount transferred by an English local housing authority from its housing revenue account to its general fund in 1990-91 was £7,299,863 by the London borough of Barking and Dagenham.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of his Department's funding of the Housing Corporation (a) nationally and (b) in the south-west region, for each year from 1989-90 to 1992-93.

Mr. Yeo: These are as follows:

£ million

	The Housing Corporation	Corporation's west region
1989-90	935	n.a.
1990-91	1,063	73
1991-92	1,614	136
1992-93	1,770	178

Prior to 1990-91 the Corporation did not set regional cash limits and therefore, regional expenditure figures were not available.

Sports and Leisure Management

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he is giving to local authorities to assist them in avoiding becoming victims of cartels in the field of sports and leisure management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: General advice on ways of promoting competition for services subject to compulsory competitive tendering is contained in Departmental circulars 19/88 and 1/91. Local authorities that suspect that there may be cartels operating in any area of activity should refer to the guidance note "Cartels: detection and remedies—A guide for local authorities", published by the Office of Fair Trading and describing the steps that authorities should take.

Planning Applications

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the outcome of the consultation exercise on giving effect to his commitment to publicity for all planning applications.

Mr. Yeo: I am pleased to announce today arrangements for compulsory publicity for all planning applications. The new procedures will ensure that interested parties have the opportunity to comment on all planning applications affecting them.

The new arrangement will allow local planning authorities the maximum possible discretion to continue using the procedures which many of them have had in place for a long time. They are as follows:

(a) local planning authorities will be responsible for publicising planning applications;
(b) the list of so-called "bad neighbour" developments in Article 11 of the General Development Order 1988 will be abolished, and the link with environmental statements, required under Regulation 12 of the Environmental Assessment Regulations, will be severed;
(c) developments requiring environmental statements, departures from the development plan, and those affecting rights of way will be subject to compulsory site notices and newspaper advertising;
(d) for other major development, site notices or neighbour notification (as appropriate) and newspaper advertising will be required;
(e) for minor development, site notices or neighbour notification (as appropriate) will be required;
(f) publicity for reserved matters and amendments to planning applications will be at the discretion of local planning authorities;
(g) the same procedures will apply to development by the Crown, and to local authorities' own development;
(h) my Department will issue a circular in advance of the new legislation. It will give advice on best practice, including what constitutes "major" and "minor" development, and on notification of decisions to those who have commented on planning applications.

I am making this announcement in advance of the new arrangements taking effect on 4 May, to allow local authorities time to digest the changes. But I look to them to implement the new procedures as soon as possible, and not just to wait until the new legislative requirements come into force.

Since most local planning authorities already undertake some form of publicity for planning applications, I do not believe these new procedures will represent a significant increase in costs overall. However, they will be taken into account when we next review planning application fees.

Landfill Directive

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to respond to the seventh report of the Environment Select Committee (HC-263) on the EC draft directive on the landfill of waste.

Mr. Baldry: I have today laid before the House copies of the Government's response to the seventh report from the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment; the EC draft directive on the landfill of waste. Copies are also available in the Library. The Government broadly welcomes the Committee's report, which makes a number of useful points both about the draft EC landfill directive and about the management of waste in general. However, the Government take issue with the Committee on some points, most notably concerning a suggested strategic role for the proposed environment agency and the adequacy of the Department of the Environment's programme for waste-related research. Command Paper 1821, which is published today, seeks to clarify the Government's position on these and other issues raised by the Committee.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much he estimates will be raised from standard community charges on empty properties and second homes in England in 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 4 February 1992]: This information is not available.

Sports and Leisure Management

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to temporarily halting the process of compulsory competitive tendering in local authority sports and leisure management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 4 February 1992]: There is no evidence to suggest that the vast majority of local authorities have not been able to meet the statutory timetable. However, my right hon. Friend is prepared to consider any requests which he might receive from individual authorities to defer in exceptional circumstances the relevant dates for compliance with the legislation.

TRANSPORT

Catamaran Crews

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those qualifications required by port and sea-going general purpose staff employed as crew members of a catamaran.

Mr. McLoughlin: No qualifications are required for port staff engaged in the operation of catamarans. The qualifications required by the operating crew of a sea-going catamaran carrying more than 12 passengers are deck and engineer officer certificates of competency and qualified category 1, 2 or 3 seamen. Other general purpose staff are classified as "adult seafarers", in addition to attending an approved basic sea survival course and periods of sea service they also undertake in-house company training on vessel familiarisation and emergency procedures. The appropriate number of persons practised in the handling and operation of liferafts must be carried.

Channel Tunnel (Access)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on proposals for direct access from the north-west region to the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail plans to run passenger and freight services between the channel tunnel and the north-west. It has announced that there will be freight terminals at Trafford Park in Manchester and Seaforth in Merseyside. A substantial programme of major road improvements, which will improve access between the north-west and the tunnel, is also under way.

Seat Belts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to standardise seat belt design for all passengers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will require vehicle manufacturers to replace straps with standard seat belts.

Mr. Chope: Seat belt design is already standardised under European Community directive 77/541/EEC as amended and adapted by directives 81/576/EEC, 82/319/EEC and 90/628/EEC. These standards do not specify three-point belts in all cases since for many in-board seating positions it is only technically possible for two anchoring points to be fitted.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what research his Department is carrying out into the potential dangers of the wearing of single strap seat belts;

(2) what statistical information he has on injuries associated with the wearing of single strap seat belts.

Mr. Chope: Statistics on injuries caused by the wearing of lap belts in the United Kingdom are not available, but research in the United States indicates that lap belts reduce death and serious injury by 25 to 40 per cent. and three-point belts by 40 to 50 per cent. Although there is no current research specifically into this topic, the Department is monitoring the effectiveness of all seat belts, in its accident crash investigations.

Class 158 Trains

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions class 158 trains have failed to activate track circuits; what the reasons were; on how many of these occasions they also failed to activate automatic signals; and if he will make a statement on the safety implications of these incidents.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has informed me that its record show 52 occasions on which class 158 trains have failed to activate track circuits. It has no information on how many of these related to track circuits controlling automatic signals. A build-up of leaf mulch on the train wheels is the principal cause. BR assures me there has been no equipment failure.

The problem causes a momentary loss of indication of the train on signalbox panels, but because the loss is apparent to the signalman, safety is not jeopardised. BR is addressing the matter urgently and the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is keeping closely in touch with developments.

High-Speed Trains (Accidents)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with representatives from the railways inspectorate concerning accidents caused due to falls from high-speed trains.

Mr. Freeman: Her Majesty's railway inspectorate is leading a Health and Safety Executive investigation into the pattern of falls from passenger trains at the request of the Health and Safety Commission. I expect to receive advice from the commission on this matter when the report of the investigation is published in the spring.

Train Doors

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent British Rail has implemented the recommendations made early last year by Knight Wendling Consultants in the report of its investigations into BR slam-shut doors.

Mr. Freeman: The Knight Wendling report made seven recommendations calling for further action or investigation by the British Rail Board. I understand from British Rail that action has been taken as follows:

Recommendation 1	which called for a thorough statistical review has been acted upon and is nearing completion.
Recommendation 2	called for revised safety notices. New notices have been designed for Mark II and Mark III stock and the programme of installation is largely completed.
Recommendation 3	which called for a computer simulation, has been undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive in co-operation with the BR Board. The results of this will be published in the report of the HSE investigation.
Recommendation 4	required BR to consider and evaluate various engineering steps to improve safety. Much work has been done on this already and further work is being undertaken.
Recommendation 5	which called for BR to undertake a thorough examination of all locks and doors has been fully implemented.
Recommendation 6	which required BR to provide a special gauge for checking locks has been implemented.
Recommendation 7	which called for a safety campaign has been implemented through the provision of posters at stations and spoken announcements on trains.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 405, if he will ask the Health and Safety Executive to release their early findings on the reliability of slam-shut doors to enable British Rail to take urgent interim measures before the production of the final Health and Safety Executive report in the spring.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive intends to publish its report on the investigation into the pattern of falls from train doors as soon as it is ready. In the meantime the executive is maintaining close liaison with British Rail about the investigation.

ENERGY

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the content and purpose of the proposals to strengthen international nuclear safeguards that were submitted by the European Community to the International Atomic Energy Agency earlier in the current year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave on 18 October 1991, at column 298, and 13 January 1992, at column 478, to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn). I have nothing further to add to these.

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to ensure that the population groups most at risk from British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. plants at (a) Capenhurst and (b) Sellafield in the case of an emergency are correctly identified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The population groups potentially at risk from an emergency at a civil nuclear plant in the United Kingdom are identified as being within a planning zone surrounding each plant. The boundary of this zone is defined in relation to the accident with the greatest off-site consequences which can reasonably be predicted given the design of the plant, its protective systems and its operating limits. Within the zone, detailed emergency plans are prepared to protect the public.

Documents outlining the emergency arrangements at Sellafield and Capenhurst have been placed in local public libraries. Population groups within the planning zone for Sellafield have also been informed of the action they would be advised to take in the event of an emergency in a leaflet prepared and distributed to them by the local community liaison committee for the Sellafield site. A similar leaflet will shortly be distributed within the zone for Capenhurst.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

11. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress of the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [pursuant to his reply, 11 November 1991, c. 773-74]: Experience of the home energy efficiency scheme—HEES—over its first year of operation has shown that the scheme has been well received and meets a real need. I am therefore increasing funding available in 1992-93 by some 50 per cent. However, it has also indicated that some changes are desirable to offer further protection to low-income households, promote higher standards of workmanship and encourage improved access to the scheme through a more uniform pattern of work. I will therefore shortly be introducing new regulations which will allow a package of changes from 1 April.

The most important effect of these changes will be to limit those who may do work under the scheme to network installers and to contractors who have been listed to undertake work in specific geographic areas under a new arrangement. Such a change will allow greater control over contractors who are not network installers, whilst maintaining the principle of customer choice. Applicants will still be able to carry out work themselves.

From 1 April, a new benefit, disability working allowance, will be added to the list of qualifying benefits for HEES. The maximum grant for each type of work allowable under HEES, with the exception of energy advice, will be raised by around 7 per cent.; the client contribution will be raised by a similar proportion. The present lower grant maximum for work undertaken by trainees will be abolished.

In addition to these changes, a number of other minor amendments will be made which are designed to improve the administration of the scheme. I have today placed in the Library copies of a press release which gives details of these and the other changes.

The increased funds which have been made available to the scheme for 1992-93 and these changes are expected to enable around 240,000 homes to be treated under the scheme in the year.

WALES

Snowdonia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Snowdonia national park committee concerning the designation of Snowdonia as an environmentally sensitive area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The chairman of the committee has written to me proposing that Snowdonia national park be considered for designation as an environmentally sensitive area. I shall be meeting him, and the chairmen of the Pembrokeshire Coast and Brecon Beacons national parks, in the near future to hear their views.

Condensation and Dampness

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce a scheme whereby additional financial resources can be made available to local housing authorities in Wales to overcome problems of condensation or dampness in their council housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I have no plans to make additional resources available for this specific purpose. It is for individual authorities to decide what priority to give to measures to reduce condensation and dampness, which could include advice to their tenants on maintaining adequate heating and ventilation.

Local authority housing estates with particular problems may however be eligible for support under my proposed estates partnership scheme. Details of the programme will be announced in due course.

Council Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table of housing for each of the district councils for Wales showing (a) the total number of houses and flats currently owned by the council and (b) the number of these which were built prior to 1940.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Estimates of dwellings built before 1940 are not available: however, data are provided in the table from the 1986 Welsh inter-censal survey showing the proportion of the 1986 local authority stock built before 1945.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many powered wheelchairs issued by his Department are currently in use by disabled people in Wales; and how many such wheelchairs were issued to new applicants in 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In Wales, the responsibility for the issue of wheelchairs—both powered and non-powered—lies with the artificial limb and appliance service. Since April 1988, the day-to-day management of the service has been undertaken by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, WHCSA. The information requested is not held centrally, and so I have asked the WHCSA to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what circumstances his Department issues powered wheelchairs; and what changes there have been in the eligibility rules for such wheelchairs during the past five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Decisions on such matters are for the management of the artificial limb and appliance service, taking into account the specialist clinical advice available to it. I have asked the Welsh Health Common Services Authority to write to the hon. Gentleman on these matters.

Fish Testing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to institute a system of routine testing of indigenous fish in the rivers and lakes of Wales to monitor for the absorption of persistent poisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The chemical safety and nutritional value of the food supply are monitored to protect the consumer. This surveillance system includes an extensive programme covering fish caught commercially. It is impractical to monitor effectively fish caught for sport in freshwater, but, as a precautionary measure, the Government have issued advice to anglers not to consume fish from waters which the National Rivers Authority considers to be polluted.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate, in respect of the grant money in 1991-92 for agencies in Wales which provide services to combat alcohol misuse mentioned on page 42 of the Lord President's report on alcohol misuse (a) how much has been given to Alcohol Concern Wales, (b) Youthlink Wales and (c) local agencies.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The amounts allocated in 1991-92 are as follows:

Alcohol Concern Wales	68,079
Youthlink Wales (including Council for Wales Voluntary Service)	54,660
Local Statutory and Voluntary Agencies	290,000

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local agencies in Wales which have received grant aid from the grant money referred to on page 42 of the Lord President's report on alcohol misuse in 1991-92; and what was the figure granted in each case.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Not all allocations have been finalised. However, provisional allocations are as follows:

Funding initiative combating alcohol misuse in Wales

	£
Clwyd/Gwynedd
Development Officer; Alcohol Information Centre (Rhyl); Administrative Officer; North Clwyd Alcohol Misuse Team; Counsellor Co-ordinator	66,000

Theatres and Concert Halls

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which (a) theatres and (b) concert halls in Wales he has visited in his official capacity in the last 12 months.

Mr. David Hunt: In my official capacity I visited St David's hall on 1 March 1991 and Theatr Clwyd, Mold, on 3 May 1991.

Ecclesiastical Buildings

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what are the present proposals in relation to the removal of the ecclesiastical exemption from listed buildings control.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office, along with the Department of the Environment, has today issued a consultation paper inviting comments on the proposal that the current exemption from listed building control should be removed from external works to listed ecclesiastical buildings of all denominations except those who can demonstrate that their internal administrative systems include adequate controls over such works. The paper also proposes clarification of the present arrangements relating to controls over buildings within the curtilage of listed ecclesiastical buildings. The consultation paper has been sent to ecclesiastical, local authority and conservation interests in Wales; a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Peru

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss human rights in Peru when he meets President Fujimori of Peru on 5 February.

The Prime Minister: I look forward to wide-ranging discussions with President Fujimori about matters of mutual concern including human rights.

Nuclear Weapons (Interviews)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all interviews he has given to the press and broadcasting media since 26 January on nuclear weapons and nuclear disarmament.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

BBC World Service, London	29 January 1992
Press Conference in Downing Street with President Yeltsin	30 January 1992
BBC TV/Radio, Sky TV, ITN—en route to New York	30 January 1992
Doorstep interview on arrival in New York	30 January 1992
CNN, CBS, ABC, NBC in New York	31 January 1992
ITN in New York	31 January 1992

Nuclear Arms Reduction

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 111, if the United Kingdom plans to submit any of its nuclear arms to multilateral nuclear arms reduction and disarmament talks over the next year.

The Prime Minister: When I met President Yeltsin in London he accepted that Trident would be a minimum deterrent, and that the focus of arms control negotiations should be on the arsenals of the United States and Russia. We have already announced plans to cut the United Kingdom's stockpile of sub-strategic nuclear weapons by about half.

EMPLOYMENT

Offshore Oil

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors or other officials are engaged in or connected with the safety of offshore oil operations in the North sea; and at what annual cost.

Mr. Forth: The number of staff employed in the Health and Safety Executive's offshore safety division on 1 February 1992 was 192. The budget allocated to the division for its payroll costs in 1991-92 is £5,726,000.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish a table showing the September 1991 estimates of number of employees in employment in Britain, and in each standard region for the overall total, male, part-time and full-time female employees and showing in each case how this differs from the equivalent original and revised estimates for September 1989;

(2) if he will publish a table showing (a) the original and (b) the revised estimates of employment of employees in each British standard region in September 1989 and September 1990 distinguishing between total employment, male employment, full-time employment for females and part-time employment for females.

Mr. Jackson: As the answer contains several statistical tables, I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Security Guards

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the average hourly (a) rates of pay and (b) average number of hours worked weekly by private security guards.

Mr. Forth: It is estimated from the April 1991 new earnings survey that average hourly earnings excluding overtime for "security guards and related occupations" were £5·07, and average total hours were 48·9 per week, of which 7·1 were overtime. The figures relate to full-time employees on adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Central and Eastern Europe

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will define the precise standing of spending on central and eastern European projects within the provisions of the Overseas Development Administration budget; and for what reasons central and eastern Europe are not included in the statistical appendix of the publication "British Overseas Aid—the 1991 Review";

(2) if he will include a direct comparison between British overseas aid spending and the spending of other OECD Development Assistance Committee members in GDP percentage terms in future editions of the British overseas aid annual review.

Mrs. Chalker: The programme of assistance to central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union is additional to, and separate from, the official United Kingdom aid programme for developing countries. The statistical appendix in the publication "British Overseas Aid—1991 Review" is concerned only with aid to and for the benefit of developing countries. The format of the next edition of the annual review is currently under discussion.

United Nations Development Fund for Women

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much Britain contributed financially to UNIFEM, in cash and real terms, for each year since 1979 to the present date.

Mrs. Chalker: UNIFEM, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, was created by the United Nations General Assembly in 1984. The United Kingdom has made annual voluntary contributions since 1985 as follows:

£'000s

	Cash Terms	1991 prices
1985	100	143
1986	50	69
1987	50	66
1988	50	62
1989	50	58
1990	100	107
1991	100	100

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Research Institutes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the research institutes operated for, or on behalf of, his Department and the total employment thereat.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department does not operate any research institutes directly, institutes, centres and units are operated by the research councils, with DES funding, as shown in the table. Some establishments are jointly operated with universities and other bodies; in these cases the numbers employed refer to research council employees only.

The list includes some centres and units operated by the research councils within higher education institutions. It does not cover other research undertaken in universities and other higher education institutions with funding from the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and from the research councils.

Teacher Training

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what timetable he intends to follow in devising value-added indicators to be applied to examination results in the selection of schools to provide classroom-based teacher training.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend issued a consultation document about the Government's proposals for school-based secondary postgraduate certificate in education courses on 28 January. This explained that the Government intend to move to as soon as possible towards the use of performance indicators for the choice of partner schools—such as academic results, staying on rates, truancy rates and the destination of pupils in terms of employment or further and higher education; and that value-added factors could well be applied to examination results and national curriculum assessments, because it will be important for student teachers to experience schools that are successful in difficult circumstances.

The consultation period will last until the end of March. In the light of the outcome of the consultation, my right hon. and learned Friend will ask the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education to prepare detailed guidelines for the operation of partnerships between higher education institutions and schools, including appropriate performance indicators for use in the selection of schools.

Schools (Devonport)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now approve the reorganisation of Devonport schools in Plymouth.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to make a decision on these proposals shortly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the average amount of occupational pension received by retired public servants.

Mr. Maples: Information about average pensions for all retired public servants is not kept centrally. The latest information which is available centrally is as follows:

Scheme	Year	Number of pensioners	Average annual pension £
Civil Service	1991-92	392,800	3,811
NHS (England and Wales)	1991-92	263,600	3,604
NHS (Scotland)	1991-92	44,200	3,236
Teachers (England and Wales)	1991-92	280,000	5,900
Teachers (Scotland)	1991-92	29,000	5,801
Local Government (England and Wales)	1988-89	482,500	2,169
Local Government (Scotland)	1989-90	81,600	2,010
Armed Forces	1991-92	255,000	3,886

Currency Values

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the average value of the pound against the deutschmark, the US dollar and the yen in each year since 1985; and the year on year changes as an index with 1985 as the base.

Mr. Maples: The annual average foreign exchange rates for the pound against the deutschmark, the US dollar and the Japanese yen in the years 1985 to 1991 were as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Deutschmark	3·7842	3·1828	2·9413	3·1236	3·0795	2·8759	2·9254
US Dollar	1·2976	1·4672	1·6392	1·7796	1·6383	1·7864	1·7685
Japanese Yen	307·08	246·80	236·50	227·98	225·66	257·38	237·56

Using 1985 as a base of 100 these exchange rates give the following index of year on year changes:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Deutschmark	100	84	78	83	81	76	77
US Dollar	100	113	126	137	126	138	136
Japanese Yen	100	80	77	74	73	84	77

Notes: Index figures rounded

Citizens Charter

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much he expects the implementation of the citizens charter proposals to cost; and if he will provide an analysis of this figure Department by Department.

Mr. Maude: The Government have made extra resources available to priority public services whenever money can be afforded. The latest public expenditure plans were set out in the 1991 autumn statement, and in more detail in departmental reports—Cm 1901 to 1919. The citizens charter, however, is about finding better ways of converting the money that can be afforded into even better public services. I therefore expect citizens charter proposals to be implemented within the public spending plans already announced.

Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of employees he expects will, in April 1992, have an income in excess of £23,000.

Mr. Maples: It is estimated that approximately 10 per cent. of employees will have annual earnings of £23,000 in 1992-93.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the number of people who are more than six months in arrears on their mortgage repayments.

Mr. Maples: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State on 17 October 1991, Official Report, column 211. Statistics on arrears and repossessions for the second half of 1991 are to be published by the Council of Mortgage Lenders shortly.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the gross amount he expects to be raised by the community charge in 1992-93 in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland;

(2) what estimates he has of the costs in 1992-93 of (a) community charge benefit and (b) the community charge reduction scheme;

(3) what estimates he has of the yield from community charge in 1992-93, net of community charge benefit and the community charge reduction scheme, for (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 4 February 1992]: A forecast of the net amount expected to be raised by the community charge for Great Britain in 1992-93 will be included in the Financial Statement and Budget Report. Figures for planned spending on community charge benefit and community charge reduction scheme are shown in table 5.3 of the "Supplement to the Autumn Statement", Cm 1920.

VAT

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated effect, according to the Treasury model, on (a) growth in 1992-93 and (b) inflation, of a six-month cut in VAT starting on budget day of 1 per cent., 2 per cent., 2·5 per cent., 3 per cent., 4 per cent. and 5 per cent., respectively; and what would be the estimated net cost to the Exchequer allowing for increased revenue through growth in each case.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 4 February 1992]: It has not, since 1978, been practice to provide results from the Treasury model in response to parliamentary questions; but my hon. Friend will be aware that the current version of the model is available for Members' use through the Library of the House.

Local Authority Capital Spending

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing local authority capital spending, both gross cash investment and gross real investment, for each of the years from 1986-87 to 1992-93 and the annual percentage change.

Mr. Mellor: Information on local authority gross capital spending in the period 1986-87 to 1991-92 in both cash and real terms is given in the table. Corresponding information is not available for 1992-93, but the Government's illustrative projection is that, if local authorities were to spend from usable capital receipts and revenue contributions at a rate broadly similar to the current year, total gross capital spending would be of the order of £8½ billion.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Red Fox

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the current level of the wild population of the red fox; and whether there have been any significant recent changes in that population.

Mr. Maclean: The wild red fox population fluctuates depending on the time of year, with an estimated 500,000 foxes in England, Scotland and Wales at the end of the summer, falling to 250,000 by the end of winter. I have no details of any significant changes in this population in recent times.

Meat Tenderisers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of slaughterhouses that used papain as a meat tenderiser, the regions in which such slaughterhouses are located and the number of cattle involved in each year since 1986.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available.

District Offices

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will announce the date when a decision will be given on the future of the Exeter and Truro MAFF divisional offices.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 21 January, Official Report, column 123.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the total number of BSE confirmed cases in the United Kingdom in each year since 1986.

Mr. Gummer: There were 847 cases of BSE confirmed in the United Kingdom prior to the disease becoming notifiable on 21 June 1988. Since then the following cases have been confirmed in each year:

	Number
1988	1,316
1989	6,895
1990	12,928
1991	22,770

Wild Birds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many wild birds have been imported into the United Kingdom during the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of captive birds, other than poultry or homing pigeons, imported into Great Britain is as follows. The figures do not distinguish between wild-caught birds and those which may have been bred in captivity. 1991 figures are not yet available.

Year	Number
1987	163,699

Food Supplements

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what submissions he has made to the European Commission concerning new European legislation on food supplements; what consultations he has had with representative organisations for nutritionists; and if he will make a statement on the main recommendations of the Denner report.

Mr. Maclean: The Department issued a statement on the recommendations in the Denner report on its publication on 27 March 1991. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. We subsequently consulted over 160 organisations on the report including those representing nutritionists. The European Commission have recently issued a discussion paper on dietary supplements which we have circulated to all those who commented on the Denner report. We will be making a submission to the Commission once views on the discussion paper have been received.

Milk

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries in the EC have milk marketing schemes.

Mr. Maclean: Under Community law member states may be authorised to grant organisations representing at least 80 per cent. of the number and 50 per cent. of the production of milk producers in their area exclusive rights to buy from them milk which they produce and market without processing. This is subject to the fulfilment of conditions relating to consumption and compliance with rules designed to prevent abuse of a dominant market position. The United Kingdom is the only member state authorised in this way.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) which measures he is considering to help the milk marketing board produce a more competitive and successful United Kingdom dairy industry;

(2) if he will make a statement on the results of his discussions with the dairy trade, the milk marketing board and the European Commission regarding the future of the milk marketing arrangements have had so far;

(3) if he will make a statement on his policy on the future of the milk marketing scheme;

(4) if the Government will support the milk marketing board's proposals for the transition to new arrangements for the milk marketing scheme.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom's statutory milk marketing arrangements, which have served producers well, cannot be sustained in the face of growing commercial and legal pressures. Nor are they sufficiently flexible to enable the United Kingdom industry to compete efficiently in an increasingly diverse market place. The Milk Marketing Board for England and Wales began considering the options open to it to meet these challenges in 1989 and the Government's approach has been to encourage the industry to come forward with its own proposals for change.

Rapid, but orderly, change to new non-statutory arrangements is essential. The Government are therefore looking to all five United Kingdom milk marketing boards to put forward detailed proposals for their replacement by Easter. The recent announcement by the Milk Marketing Board for England and Wales outlining the successor voluntary arrangements which it would like to see introduced follows discussion with Government, the EC Commission and the dairy trade and is a welcome step in this process. Both the Government and the EC Commission will wish to examine carefully the boards' detailed proposals when they are presented.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to set a final date for the notification of milk quota transfers in England and Wales in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Following consultations with the industry and in exercise of powers provided by the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations I have decided that transfers of unused milk quota notified after 24 April will have no effect on the calculation of supplementary levy liability for 1991-92, even if they are notified as having occurred during that year.

Similar deadlines have operated for the past three years. These have encouraged producers to notify quota transfers in good time and have thus assisted in the smooth running of the quota system.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the figures on a county basis in England for each year since 1988 of (a) the number of serious irregularities of the set-aside scheme, (b) the number of minor breaches of the scheme and (c) the number of cases where payments were witheld in full or in part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 December 1991]: This information is set out in the table, which includes updated figures of payments recovered in full or in part. Payments have not been recovered or withheld where detection of the infringement led to the participant leaving the scheme or taking corrective action before claiming any grant or where a warning was considered to be the most appropriate action.

In my answer on 18 November 1991, Official Report, columns 1-2, I indicated that inspections during the 1990-91 set-aside year had identified 18 serious irregularities. Following further, detailed investigation, three of those irregularities have proved to be less serious than they initially appeared and are now listed as "other infringements". The number of recoveries is also higher than reported in November following completion of the necessary action in certain cases which were previously outstanding.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Risk Guarantees

Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration has been given to providing risk guarantees to commercial enterprises in the United Kingdom in respect of tourism projects in eastern Europe.

Mr. Sainsbury: The normal range of Export Credits Guarantee Department facilities are, in principle, available for capital projects in the tourism sector. The actual availability and terms of such support for individual countries and projects are subject to ECGD's normal underwriting criteria. This applies to the countries of eastern Europe, as it does to all other countries.

Car Imports

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of cars imported from (a) South Korea, (b) Malaysia, (c) Yugoslavia and (d) Czechoslovakia since 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: The available information is given in the table.

United Kingdom Imports of Cars[1] (numbers)

Insider Dealing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many inquiries he has launched into potential insider dealing under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 in each six-monthly period since April 1988.

Mr. Redwood: The number of investigations under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 since April 1988 are as follows:

	Number
April 1988 to September 1988	6
October 1988 to March 1989	7
April 1989 to September 1989	9
October 1989 to March 1990	3
April 1990 to September 1990	3
October 1990 to March 1991	1
April 1991 to September 1991	1
October 1991 to date	1

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prosecutions for insider dealing the stock exchange has instituted since it was given the powers to do so under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: There has been one prosecution by the stock exchange for insider dealing offences. Both defendants in the case were convicted.

Footwear Imports (Indonesia)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the value of footwear imports under the generalised system of preferences—GSP—scheme from Indonesia so far this year for (a) leather uppered footwear, (b) textile uppered footwear and (c) rubber and plastic uppered footwear.

Mr. Sainsbury: GSP import figures for these products from Indonesia, for the month of January 1992, are not yet available.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from United Kingdom manufacturing industry about future business prospects.

Mr. Lilley: I have received the excellent report by the CBI's manufacturing advisory group which showed that recent years have seen a transformation in Britain's manufacturing base. United Kingdom-based manufacturers are well placed in some of the key growth markets of the future.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Royal Commonwealth Society Library

4. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken to provide financial assistance to the Royal Commonwealth Society library.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I have been following closely the efforts of the Commonwealth Trust to safeguard the Royal Commonwealth Society library. The Government support these efforts which we understand show some prospect of succeeding. We have made it clear, however, that public funds will not be made available to help the Commonwealth Trust overcome its present financial difficulties.

Uruguay

14. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Uruguay.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We enjoy close and friendly relations with Uruguay. During my recent visit to Montevideo I had wide-ranging and valuable discussions with President Lacalle and the Foreign Minister, Dr. Gros Espiell.

Croatia

22. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the criteria taken into account in determining whether a nation should be recognised; and how this policy was operated in relationship to Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The criteria are that a country should have a clearly defined territory with a population; a Government with a prospect of retaining control; and independence in its foreign relations. These criteria are always subject to interpretation in the light of circumstances on the ground. In this case we and our EC partners recognised Croatia on the basis of advice from the arbitration commission that Croatia largely fulfilled the guidelines on recognition adopted last December. These were that the state to be recognised should respect the United Nations charter; guarantee the rights of minorities; respect the inviolability of frontiers except by peaceful agreement; accept commitments on disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation, security and regional stability; and promise to settle by agreement questions of state-succession and regional disputes. We also took account of additional undertakings from the Croatian Government on minorities legislation.

Iran

23. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain very concerned about the human rights situation in Iran. The reports of the United Nations special representative, Mr. Galindo Pohl, following his visits to Iran in 1990, contain ample evidence to justify these concerns. A further report, following his visit last December, is due to be presented to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva. We shall study this report carefully together with the response made by the Iranian Government to the allegations contained in Mr. Pohl's earlier reports before deciding on further action.

Hong Kong

24. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Hong Kong to discuss the future of the colony.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no present plans to make a further visit to Hong Kong. But my noble Friend Lord Caithness, Minister of State, hopes to visit the territory shortly.

32. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans discussions with the People's Republic of China on the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It was agreed during the Prime Minister's visit to Peking in September 1991 that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs would meet the Chinese Foreign Minister at six-monthly intervals to discuss issues of mutual concern including Hong Kong. One purpose of these meetings will be to give added impetus to the detailed discussions on questions relating to the future of Hong Kong which takes place regularly in the Sino-British joint liaison group.

Spain

25. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the state of relations between the United Kingdom and Spain.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Relations between the United Kingdom and Spain are very good.

South Africa

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what future initiatives Her Majesty's Government intend to pursue to further sporting relationships with South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: I am glad that contacts with sport in South Africa are being restored, as sports there become racially integrated. We promoted this principle, on which there is now international consensus. Carrying it through is, and should be, a matter for the various sports bodies concerned.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Foreign and Commonwealth Office annual report is to be published this year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office departmental report is to be published on 12 February.

Turkey

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last had discussions with the Turkish Government about the treatment of Kurdish people living inside Turkey.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I last discussed this issue at my meeting with the Turkish Foreign Minister on 20 December.

East Timor

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the consideration given by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to the situation in East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: East Timor is on the agenda of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. On 30 January I spoke to the commission in Geneva on the theme of accountability for human rights violations. Those who have broken the law in East Timor should be brought to account. We shall work closely with our EC partners on appropriate action in the commission.

36. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the situation in East Timor.

38. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he intends to make to the Government of Indonesia following the publication of the report of the inquiry into the massacre of civilians at Dili, East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 30 January, Official Report, column 651.

Saudi Arabia

30. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet representatives of the Government of Saudi Arabia to discuss human rights issues.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ministers and officials, including members of our embassy in Riyadh, discuss human rights issues with the Saudi Arabian authorities regularly. I have no plans to meet a representative of the Saudi Arabian Government in the near future.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made or plans to make to the Government of Saudi Arabia about infringements of human rights and religious freedom in that country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ministers and officials, including members of our embassy in Riyadh, regularly discuss human rights issues, including freedom of religion, with the Saudi Arabian authorities. I have no plans to meet a representative of the Saudi Arabian Government in the near future.

Baltic Republics

31. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the development of relations with the Baltic republics.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We intend to develop relations actively. We are giving practical help in consolidating their independence, building up democratic systems of government and rebuilding their economies. The bulk of our assistance is being directed through the European Community technical and emergency assistance programmes. We have also committed over £900,000 to projects through the know-how fund. We sponsored their United Nations membership applications. We pressed in the European Community for early trade and co-operation agreements: these are now being negotiated. We are supporting early IMF membership. Finally, we are resolving the Baltic gold question, in a prompt and effective manner which will give an important boost to the Baltic economies.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on international assistance for the states of the former Soviet Union.

Mrs. Chalker: Assistance to the former Soviet Union committed in 1991 totals approximately $50 billion, of which the United Kingdom share is above $650 million. The top priority now is its translation into effective action on the ground. I am glad to say that our aid is indeed getting through.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances he has received from the former Soviet republics on their willingness to meet their international obligations.

Mr. Hurd: Russia, as the continuation of the former Soviet Union, has accepted responsibility for the former union's international obligations. All the other former Soviet republics except Georgia have given assurances that they also will respect relevant international obligations of the former union.

United Nations Conference on Environment and Development

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will represent the United Kingdom at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Prime Minister has indicated that he hopes to attend the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in June 1992. No decision has been taken on the composition of the rest of the British delegation.

EC Single Market

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards completion of the single market.

Mr. Garel-Jones: A total of 232 of the 282 measures in the Commission's 1985 single market White Paper have now been agreed. The United Kingdom, as presidency in the second half of this year, will have particular responsibility for bringing the single market programme to conclusion.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

37. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the numbers of British citizens who are ex-employees of BCCI who are still in Abu Dhabi and are being refused their passports.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are at present 10 former employees of BCCI who entered the United Arab Emirates on United Kingdom passports and whose passports are being retained by the UAE authorities. Eight of them are in detention pending the completion of investigations into the bank's affairs in Abu Dhabi. Two, who are not in detention, have outstanding liabilities to the bank. I understand that they are not seeking to leave the UAE and have not asked for the return of their passports from the authorities.

EC Foreign Policies

39. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European Community foreign policies.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I meet my European Community partners regularly. The common foreign and security policy agreed at Maastricht will strengthen intergovernmental co-operation and joint action with our partners in agreed areas of policy.

Middle East

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for further discussion with EC Ministers with a view to encouraging peace talks in the middle east.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The middle east peace talks launched in Madrid are well under way. There have been three rounds of bilaterals: we expect a fourth to begin shortly. A useful meeting to organise multilateral talks took place in Moscow on 28 and 29 January. I shall review progress with my EC colleagues at our next meeting in Lisbon on 17 February.

Commonwealth Secretariat (Accounts)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek publication of the accounts of the Commonwealth secretariat.

Mrs. Chalker: The accounts of the Commonwealth secretariat, as audited by the National Audit Office, are circulated to Commonwealth Governments. I am depositing a copy of the accounts for financial year 1989-90 in the Libraries of the House. The accounts for financial year 1990-91 will be available in June 1992.

The secretariat's financial year runs from 1 July.

Albania

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further progress has been made bilaterally and through the European Community in seeking to alleviate the plight of the Albanian people.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Overseas Development Administration has given £550,000 bilateral aid. The EC has contributed 52·5 mecu—£36·75 million—towards humanitarian food aid needs in Albania. The United Kingdom's contribution to this is £6·6 million.

China (Human Rights)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Chinese ambassador, in which he has raised cases of any individual political prisoners publicly named by Amnesty International, and in particular the case of Li Wei, currently detained in Lingyuan prison; and what general representations he has made to China about human rights.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Chinese ambassador is reminded regularly by Ministers and officials in the Foreign Office of our concern about human rights in China. Mr. Li Wei was among five detained workers from the Changchun automobile plant whose cases were included in the list left with the Chinese Government during the Prime Minister's visit to Peking in September. An updated list, compiled again in conjunction with Amnesty International, was handed over during the Prime Minister's talks with Premier Li Peng in New York last week. We and our EC colleagues maintain a constant watch on human rights issues in China, with regular representations to the Chinese Government.

Mr. Yasser Arafat

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the purpose of the meeting between Her Majesty's ambassador in Tunis and Mr. Yasser Arafat, on 26 January, and whether the ambassador gave any recognition in the meeting to Mr. Arafat's claimed capacity as President of the state of Palestine.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We maintain a dialogue with the PLO on the middle east peace process at official level. Her Majesty's ambassador at Tunis has had a number of meetings with Mr. Arafat in this context. The latest of these was on 25 January. The United Kingdom does not recognise the so-called state of Palestine and therefore the question of recognising its "President" does not arise.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those states which (a) have signed and ratified the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, (b) have acceded to the treaty but not yet completed a full safeguards agreement, pursuant to article III of the treaty, (c) have signed and ratified the treaty but are known to have breached any article of the treaty through non-compliance and (d) have indicated an intention to sign the treaty but have not yet done so.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: (a) (i) The Following countries have signed and ratified the NPT.

United Kingdom
Russian Federation
United States of America
Afghanistan
Austria
Australasia
Barbados
Belgium
Benin
Bolivia
Botswana
Bulgaria
Burkina Faso

(b) Iraq's proven endeavours to develop a nuclear weapon programme was a flagrant breach of its obligations under the NPT. The failure of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to sign and implement its safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency is also a breach of its obligations under the NPT. However, we welcome the recent signature of this agreement and look forward to its early ratification and implementation.

All those listed in B except Mozambique, Albania, South Africa, Zimbabwe, Zambia, Tanzania, Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia are in technical breach of their obligation to sign a safeguards agreement with the IAEA within 18 months of depositing their instrument of accession. However, this is of no practical significance as none of the states in question possesses nuclear materials requiring safeguards.

(d) The following states have indicated an intention to accede to the treaty, but have not yet done so:

1. France
2. China
3. Ukraine
4. Belarus
5. Kazakhstan
6. Uzbekistan
7. Turkimenistan
8. Azerbaijan
9. Kirgizstan
10. Tajikistan
11. Armenia
12. Moldova

North Korea

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, columns 103-4, what information he has about the design on which the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has constructed a plutonium production nuclear plant.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As far as we are aware, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has not made public any information about the design of this facility.

Human Rights

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part Her Majesty's Government are playing in the international fora for the promotion of human rights.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's Government has consistently played a full and active role in international human rights fora. The United Kingdom was re-elected to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights this year. I paid a visit to the Commission in Geneva on 29 and 30 January. In my speech I reaffirmed the British Government's commitment to the universal promotion of human rights and announced a £25,000 contribution to the United Nations voluntary fund on torture.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 3 February. It will consider the next stages on the European economic area in the light of discussions between the Commission and the European Free Trade Association over how to resolve the problems resulting from the European Court of Justice opinion. The Council will discuss follow-up to the Washington conference on aid to the former Soviet Union, and consider ways to develop the Community's relations with the former republics. The Council will discuss whether trade and co-operation agreements should be negotiated with Brazil and the Andean pact. A European Community trade and co-operation agreement with Paraguay will be signed in the margins. The Council will also consider policy towards Haiti following the coup. The Council will also discuss conciliation procedures on Asia/Latin America and European Community investment partners with a delegation from the European Parliament. The Commission will make a presentation on export controls on dual use goods.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 10 February. Ministers will consider multilateral surveillance of the economies of member states, including the Irish convergence programme, and also the formal adoption of the Commission's annual economic report. The Council will also consider aid to central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. The Council may also consider the revision to the financial perspective for 1992, the investment services directive; and the legislative programme relating to economic and monetary union arising from the treaty on European union. Ministers may also formally adopt the legal text of the draft directive on the commercial movement of excise goods in the single market which they agreed at the Economic and Finance Council on 16 December 1991. It is also expected that Ministers will formally adopt a new regulation for enhanced administrative cooperation between member states. This will provide for the automatic exchange of information between EC tax authorities.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 10 and 11 February. Ministers will discuss reform of the common agricultural policy, agricultural aspects of the GATT Uruguay round, public health problems affecting the killing of wild game and the marketing of wild game meat.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 25 February. Ministers may consider the final adoption of the public procurement directive for remedies in the utilities sectors, and the adoption of common positions on the third non-life insurance directive. Consolidation directives on tractors and on units of measurement, and a directive on veterinary homeopathic medicines will also be discussed by Ministers. There may also be further ministerial discussions on frontier controls, and draft legislation on data protection, precursor chemicals, food colourings and food irradiation.

Antarctica

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the abandoned British bases in Antarctica, stating for each what plans he has to ensure that they do not despoil the Antarctic environment.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

Stations and field huts abandoned since 1947 by the Falkland Islands Dependencies Survey or its successor, the British Antarctic Survey—BAS—are:

South Orkney Islands:
Cape Geddes

South Shetland Islands:
Admiralty Bay
Deception Island

Trinity Peninsula:
Hope Bay
View Point

Antarctic Peninsula:
Portal Point
Danco Island
Port Lockroy
Anvers Island
Prospect Point
Detaille Island
Orford Cliff
Stonington Island

Brunt Ice Shelf:
Halley Bases I-IV

Each of these bases has been visited by an inspection party to assess the work required, with the exception of Halley I and Halley II, which are now buried and inaccessible. The sites will be maintained, removed, or, in a limited number of cases, maintained as historical monuments, and the survey is now drawing up a programme to undertake the necessary work.

Remedial work has already been undertaken as follows:

Deception Island—Clean up work in 1990-91 and 1991-92, with removal of waste and fuel oil.

Halley III—Clean-up work and removal of waste in 1990-91, before the base became too unsafe for access.

Anvers Island—Removal of the base, except for the foundations, by a United States group on behalf of BAS.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Manor House Residential Home

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to increase the physiotherapy service to patients at Manor House residential home in Rathfriland, County Down.

Mr. Hanley: The management and delivery of services in Rathfriland is the responsibility of Southern health and social services board. The hon. Gentleman may wish to contact the chairman of the board Mr. J. Daniel Thompson DL.

Health Board Management Units

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what are the current waiting times for speech therapy appointments in each of the units of management of each health board in Northern Ireland;

(2) what are the current waiting times in respect of chiropody care in each unit of management in each health board in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Gentleman may wish to contact the chairmen of the four health and social services boards.

Speech Therapy

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many speech therapists are employed in each unit of management of each health board in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Details of the number of speech therapists employed in each unit of management of each health and social services board at 30 September 1991, the latest date available, are as follows:

Home Help Service

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people have to pay for home help service in the Down section of the Down and Lisburn unit of management.

(2) how many people had home help service withdrawn in the Down section of the Down and Lisburn unit of management in each of the years since 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1991 and from 1 April 1991 to 31 December 1991, respectively.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Gentleman may wish to contact the chairman of the Eastern health and social services board, Mr. Norman Fergusson, CBE.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are in receipt of free home help service in each of the units of management of each health board in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Gentleman may wish to contact the chairman of the four health and social services boards.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements for transfer of dowry funds with resettled mental handicap patients to local authorities have been made in each regional health authority; under what terms these payments are made; and if he will list by regional health authority the sums transferred each year on this basis.

Mr. Hanley: The principle of dowry transfer to local authorities does not apply in Northern Ireland because of the integrated nature of the provision of health and personal social services.

HEALTH

Pulmonary Tuberculosis

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each region the number of deaths from pulmonary tuberculosis for each month of the last two years.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available information is given in the tables.

Deaths (underlying cause) from pulmonary tuberculosis (ICD 011), for England, Wales and elsewhere and for each RHA separately: and for each month of 1989.

Psychopathic Persons

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration is being given to amending the Mental Health Act 1983 to enable psychopathic persons, though deemed untreatable, to be admitted to mental hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: The needs of people suffering from psychopathic disorder, and how they can best be met both in the prison service and in the health and social care system, are one of the issues being considered by the joint Department of Health/Home Office review of services for mentally disordered offenders. We shall be considering very carefully the conclusions reached by the review and any questions they raise about possible changes in the present law.

National Health Service (Salaries)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the national health service, and at which grades, earn more than £20,280 a year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At least 70,000 people working in the NHS in England, and in the categories listed below are estimated to have basic earnings greater than £20,280 per annum. An additional and significant number in most of those categories have gross earnings in excess of £20,280, because they receive additional payments such as overtime and allowances. Review body awards as well as pay settlements due on 1 April will further increase the numbers earning more than £20,280.

Groups containing people whose earnings in the NHS exceed £20,280 per annum:

Administrative and Clerical
Ambulance Officers
Community Medical and Dental Staff
Hospital Medical and Dental Staff
Nursing and Midwifery Staff
Professions Allied to Medicine
Scientific and Professional Staff
Professional and Technical Staff
General/Senior Managers
General Medical Practitioners
General Dental Practitioners

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 108, he will state the timetable for the action plan on the implementation of Social Service Department involvement in the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The juvenile remands national steering group intends to complete its work as quickly as possible and to produce an action plan no later than October.

Patients Charter

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take if any of the charter standards and patient rights are not met by any unit of the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: The patients charter gives the individual patient the right to have any complaint about denial of charter rights investigated by the chief executive of the NHS, who will take any necessary remedial action. Health authorities will have to publish information about their performance against national and local standards annually. Performance against standards will be a key feature in the NHS performance review process.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sales of capital assets have arisen from closures of mental handicap hospitals; and if he will list the assets disposed of and the money raised by each sale.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not available centrally.

Oral Health

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the consultative document on oral health strategy; what opportunities there will be for representations by interested parties; and if he intends to establish external consultative committees.

Mr. Dorrell: Once the final version of the consultative document is completed a firm date for publication can be set. It is expected that this will be within the next few months. When the document is issued, there will be an opportunity for all interested parties to make representations. It may then be considered appropriate to establish a consultative committee.

Pharmaceuticals (Price Regulations)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current turnover threshold below which companies who participate in the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme are exempt from the requirement to submit detailed accounts and price structure analyses to his Department; when that figure was fixed; what plans he has to raise the threshold; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The pharmaceutical price regulation scheme (PPRS) is a voluntary agreement between the Government and the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI). It applies to all companies supplying branded medicines to the National Health Service which are prescribed by medical or dental practitioners.

Under the terms of the agreement, companies with annual sales to the NHS of over £4 million are asked to supply the full details required by the annual financial returns specified in the scheme. Companies with annual sales to the NHS of between £500,000 and £4 million are asked to provide copies of their audited accounts and of a statement giving a breakdown of turnover between NHS sales, export sales of NHS medicines and other sales, plus details of sales promotion costs. Companies with annual sales to the NHS not exceeding £500,000 are exempt from supplying financial information except when specifically called for.

These threshold levels were established when the current PPRS was agreed with the ABPI in 1986. The scheme runs until 1 October 1992, but will continue beyond that if neither party gives due notice of termination. The Government are therefore now considering whether any changes to the current scheme are needed. The possibility of raising thresholds is one of the points which could be discussed with the ABPI.

Departmental Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long each computerised system in his Department would take to return to full operation in the event of a disaster.

Mr. Dorrell: Each IT system in the Department contains elements designed to reduce the likelihood of a disaster and minimise the impact of any disaster that may occur. Recovery time would depend on the severity of the breakdown.

Physiotherapists

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which departments or other authorities have responsibility for the education and training of state registered physiotherapists to meet the needs of non-NHS employers and of the public for independent practitioners; what arrangements exist for the co-ordination of these needs with those of the NHS; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Education and training for state registered physiotherapists is provided at both further education and NHS institutions. Regional health authorities purchase the majority of places available and also provide bursaries to physiotherapy students. In determining how many places to purchase they consult locally with public, private and voluntary sector interests so as to assess and meet overall demand.

Caring for Children

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will issue guidance to local authorities on the implementation of the Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations 1991;

(2) if the guidance contained in Home Office circular 88(102) is superseded by the Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations 1991;

(3) if he will make a statement on his plans for publicising the Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations 1991;

(4) if he will extend the principles concerning the schedule of offences established in the Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations 1991 to the vetting of (a) applicants for social work employment and social work students seeking placements, (b) applicants to work in childrens homes and (c) potential foster parents.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Guidance on the implementations of the Disqualification for the Caring for Children Regulations 1991 is contained in volume 8 of the Children Act Regulations and Guidance series, which also reproduces the text of the regulations. Copies of volume 8 were distributed to local authorities, voluntary organisations and others with an interest on 15 October 1991.

The Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations apply to applicants who wish to work in registered childrens homes or voluntary homes or as private foster parents, child minders or providers of day care. Local authorities have discretion under the Children Act to lift a disqualification, although the guidance in volume 8 is that this should be done only in the most exceptional circumstances.

Although the regulations do not apply to the local authority sector, the guidance in volume 8 advises that local authorities should have regard to the regulations when considering the appointment of staff to any services which are run by the local authority and when assessing people's suitability to work as childminders or foster parents employed by a local authority. Volumes 2 ("Family Support, Day Care and Educational Provision for Young Children"), 3 ("Family Placements") and 4 ("Residential Care") in the Children Act series contain clear guidance on the necessity for local authorities to undertake a thorough assessment of the suitability of people who wish to work with children in any services run by the local authority. These provisions ensure that equivalent measures exist for safeguarding the welfare of children care for in such services as in any in the private and voluntary sectors.

The guidance in Home Office circular 88(102) is not superseded by the Disqualification for Caring for Children Regulations 1991 and continues to apply to local authorities in addition to the Children Act guidance in volumes 2, 3 and 4.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Resettlement Units

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many places are currently available in resettlement units throughout the United Kingdom, showing the location of each unit and the number of places in each unit;

(2) what sums have been allocated in his Departmental budget to provide resettlement unit places; and what plans he has made for the next three years;

(3) what research has been undertaken to investigate the need for places in resettlement units.

Miss Widdecombe: The management of the Resettlement Agency is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement outlining Her Majesty's Government's current plans for those remaining resettlement units in terms of the duty imposed on him under the Social Security Act 1980.

Miss Widdecombe: Under the plans announced in 1985 we will have replaced eight resettlement units with better alternative facilities by March 1993. These units include most of those whose physical condition was the poorest.

We have now decided that the best way forward is to work towards the transfer of most of the remaining hostels directly to voluntary organisations and others who have skills and experience in caring for single homeless people.

The Resettlement Agency which is now responsible for running the units therefore intends to invite suitable organisations with the appropriate skills to tender for these, starting with the hostels at Newbury and Camden. The agency will continue to provide funding to organisations that take over the running of transferred units. If any savings are produced by this revised strategy they will be recycled to fund further replacement provision. The tendering process will also encourage outside organisations to make positive proposals for re-employing resettlement unit staff.

We believe that this approach is the best way to secure improved service to unsettled homeless people quickly, avoids the loss of local service and offers the best all-round value for money. By a combination of transfer and replacement the Resettlement Agency is now looking to complete its task of securing replacement providers within five years.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state what progress has been made since April 1991 with the Welsh language implementation programme, established in his Department in Wales; what specific changes of policy in his Department on this issue have taken place during 1991; and if he is satisfied with the progress that has so far been made.

Miss Widdecombe: The use of the Welsh language in the administration of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefit Deductions

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the estimated administrative cost to his Department of making deductions from income support for community charge arrears;

(2) what are the administrative costs of making deductions from income support payments to meet claimants' debts.

Miss Widdecombe: The resourcing of this work is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disability Appeal Tribunals (Membership)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received concerning social security regulations affecting disabled people who became panel members on disability appeal tribunals;

(2) what are his plans to amend the regulations on earnings and incapacity to permit disabled claimants who sit on disability appeal tribunals to perform their duties without incurring loss or reduction of benefit.

Mr. Scott: We have received a number of representations on this issue. We are committed to making sure that people with disabilities play an active role in the assessment and adjudication process of disability living allowance, attendance allowance and disability working allowance. This includes ensuring that as many disability appeal tribunals as possible include a disabled person in their membership. We are currently considering whether the benefit rules are acting as barrier to the independent tribunal service recruiting disabled people as disability appeal tribunal members. I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Income Support

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants with a disabled child on (a) income support and (b) housing benefit had their benefit reduced as a result of the presence of non-dependants in the household.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available in the form requested. The available information is based on the annual 1 per cent. sample surveys and, with the small numbers involved in the groups concerned, precise figures cannot be given. However, it is estimated that the total number would be less than 1,000.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants had deductions from their benefit during 1991 for (a) social fund loan repayment, (b) community charge arrears, (c) rent arrears, (d) mortgage arrears, (e) water charges and (f) fuel debts; and how many of these claimants received a disability premium.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest information available is contained in table 10.2 of the annual statistical inquiry for May 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Part-ownership Schemes

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total cost to date of setting up, publicising and administering the flexi-ownership or rents into mortgage schemes in Scotland; and how many tenants have so far acquired part-ownership of their homes under this scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Since the introduction of the pilot rent-to-mortgage scheme, the cost of setting up, publicising and administering the scheme is estimated at around £788,000. A total of 264 sales had been completed by the end of 1991, resulting in additional receipts of £2,467,000. Tenants purchasing under the scheme become owners with full title to the property from the completion of the sale.

Nursery Places

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places in nursery schools and classes were provided by education authorities in 1990-91 and 1991-92 in Scotland; how many of these places were (a) full-time and (b) part-time; and what was the total number of full-time equivalent places provided.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 4 February 1992]: Information on the number of full-time, part-time and full-time equivalent pupils attending education authority nursery schools and departments in Scotland at September 1990 and 1991 is as follows:

	Full-time pupils	Part-time pupils	Total Number	Pupils Full-time equivalent
1990	2,927	41,054	43,981	22,907·6
[1]1991	3,024	42,322	45,346	23,551·4

Some nursery pupil rolls reach higher levels after September. In session 1990-91 peak rolls were 7·4 per cent. above the total number of pupils attending at September 1990; for session 1991-92 peak rolls are anticipated to be 9·4 per cent. above the September 1991 level.

Primary School Testing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to date of the introduction of national testing into Scottish primary schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 4 February 1992]: The Government have incurred expenditure in the writing and vetting of test units, printing and distribution to schools, moderation of the pilot round, the cost of running the primary assessment unit, and of the preparation, issue and promotion of an information leaflet on testing which totals £1·16 million.

DEFENCE

Hunt Transport

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what elements of the costs of transporting horses and riders to hunting meets can readily be identified.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost of buying and maintaining horse boxes and the cost of fuel is identifiable, but is not met from public funds.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from the United States Department of Energy, as manager of the Nevada nuclear test site, regarding representations made about British nuclear testing at the Nevada test site during its public hearing hosted by the United States Department of Energy on 14 November 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Peru

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss human rights in Peru when he meets President Fujimori of Peru on 5 February.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My discussions with President Fujimori covered a wide range of issues of common interest, including human rights.

Soviet Union (Members' Visits)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of hon. Members to whom his Department has afforded a briefing in advance of visits to the former Soviet Union since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We do not hold this information. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has given briefing to a very large number of hon. Members visiting the former Soviet Union over the past 13 years, and of course stands ready to do so in the future.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's diplomatic wing cash limits and running costs limits for 1991-92.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made: The cash limit for class II, vote 1 (overseas representation) will be increased by £8,209,000 from £629,076,000 to £637,285,000. The running costs limit on vote 1 will be decreased by £1,781,000 from £480,647,000 to £487,866,000. These changes take account of increased local staff salaries overseas and the adverse effect of overseas price movements which are partially offset by reduced running costs on the home estate, local budgets and information services.

The cash limit for class II, vote 2 (other external relations) will be increased by £27,939,000 from £165,431,000 to £193,370,000. This change takes account of expenditure on Vietnamese boat people; international peacekeeping operations in Yugoslavia and Cambodia; the United Nations Angola verification mission; a grant-in-aid towards the Westminster Foundation for Democracy; a payment to the Iranian Government under the United Kingdom/Iran compensation agreement and higher than forecast expenditure on United Kingdom contributions to international organisations due to the adverse effect of overseas price movements.

The cash limit for class II, vote 4 (The British Council) will be increased by £463,000 from £89,944,000 to £90,407,000 to take account of the adverse effect of overseas price movements.

These increases will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

TRANSPORT

Cash and Running Costs Limits

28. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits and running costs limits for his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

Class and Vote	Current cash limit	Changes	Revised cash limit
VII, 1	1,953,664,000	[1] −21,435,000	1,932,229,000
2	234,438,000	[2] 3,176,000	237,614,000
4	148,254,000	8,660,000	156,914,000
5	349,585,000	[3] 7,600,000	357,185,000

[1] Transfers of £2,835,000 for research and development to class VII, vote 2, £8,850,000 for the Black Country spine road to class VIII, vote 3, £8,660,000 to class VII, vote 4 in respect of reduced appropriations in aid. There is a further reduction of £1,090,000 as a result of the demand financing arrangements for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency.

[2] An increase of £451,000 for railways inspectorate service from Department of Employment (class VI, vote 3). There is also a reduction of £110,000 in the running costs on this vote.

[3] It was announced on 1 July 1991 (Official Report column 6) that I would seek to introduce at an early opportunity legislation to write off or suspend those parts of the debt of the Humber Bridge Board that cannot be financed from the board's revenues. The board's borrowings are from the Public Works Loan Commissioners and from my Department. Until powers to write off or suspend debt are available, it would be inappropriate for further loans to be made by my Department to the board as there is no reasonable expectation of those loans being properly serviced and repaid and I understand that the Public Works Loan Commissioners have also decided that it would be inappropriate to make further advances to the board. To enable the board to meet its commitments I propose to make grants to it amounting to £7,600,000. These grants will be made on the sole authority of the estimate and the subsequent Appropriation Act.

My Department's running costs limit has been reduced by £110,000 from £378,984,000 to £378,874,000.

The changes described will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Airports

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in installing a permanent noise and track keeping system at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am delighted that my noble Friend has announced in another place that BAA has now committed itself to purchasing a system that should be installed by early autumn. The system will be one of the most modern in the world, and will have considerable flexibility in the ways it can be used. It will be used to enforce noise and track requirements and also to provide a lot more information about the performance of aircraft and their impact on surrounding communities.

The noise monitoring will be carried out by a total of 36 noise monitors. There will be 12 fixed noise monitors in total at the three airports, primarily to monitor noise against predetermined limits, and 24 mobile monitors that can be deployed to collect data on aircraft noise from any area near the airports. The monitors will be able to record the noise made by individual aircraft and will also be able to store data so that they can be analysed in a variety of ways. This will enable a review of noise limits to be carried out at the three airports with a view to introducing tougher limits more appropriate to modern aircraft. The noise monitoring installation should be completed by the early summer.

The track monitoring will require provision of radar data feed to the system. I understand that this should be available so as to allow installation of the track monitoring by early autumn. Again, the system will be able to identify the tracks followed by individual aircraft as well as to allow analysis of track data in different ways. This will be used to improve the accuracy with which aircraft follow noise preferential routes from the airports.

I am pleased to report that BAA is keen to involve local people through the local airport consultative committees in considering how best to use the system. It has great potential for ensuring that aircraft are operated in a way that minimises noise nuisance for surrounding communities. But the most effective use of the system will be developed only with experience: the contribution from local people and from the airlines to that development will be invaluable.

Holborn Station

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the safety improvements promised for Holborn station to be carried out.

Mr. Freeman: The timing of particular underground schemes is a matter for London Underground Limited.

Bow Trader

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what inquiry will be undertaken by his Department into the events which led to the Bow Trader colliding with two bridges on the Thames on the night of 31 January;

(2) if he will ask Mr. John Hayes, the head of the independent inquiry into river safety, to consider the collision of Friday 31 January of the Bow Trader into two bridges on the River Thames.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's Marine Accident Investigation Branch is involved with the Port of London Authority in an investigation into the incident. The MAIB will provide Mr. John Hayes with early advice on the initial findings of the investigation.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the minimum manning level for a dredger such as the Bow Trader, operating on the River Thames at night.

Mr. McLoughlin: The minimum manning level of United Kingdom-registered ships is assessed on an individual basis. In the case of the Bow Trader the minimum number of crew would be eight. The composition of the watch when operating on the River Thames at night should not be less than one qualified officer on the bridge, a helmsman, a lookout and an engineer.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the level of manning on the Bow Trader on the night of 31 January; whether lookouts were maintained in compliance with his Department's standards; and if they were equipped with two way radios.

Mr. McLoughlin: These matters will be addressed during the investigation.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the initiatives taken by his Department to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and indicate the estimated reduction for each initiative by (a) 2000 and (b) 2005.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment gave earlier today.

Dock Labour Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 501, if he will give details of any provision by which third parties affected by the abolition of the dock labour scheme may seek redress.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Dock Work Act 1989 made no provision in respect of creditors and non-docker employees of stevedoring firms, since their rights, in the event of a liquidation, were already governed respectively by the general legislation on insolvencies and employment protection.

Marine Accident Report

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the recommendations made by the marine accident investigation branch in the Marchioness/Bowbelle report have been fully implemented; and if he will list those recommendations which remain to be implemented, and the target implementation date.

Mr. McLoughlin: The 27 recommendations in the marine accident investigation branch report were published, separately from the report, in July 1990. The Secretary of State for Transport immediately accepted them all. So far 20 recommendations have been fully implemented.

Of those outstanding, five are to be the subject of regulations, and, as required by the Merchant Shipping Act 1979, consultative documents have been circulated for public comment. It is planned that sets of regulations, based on three recommendations will be in force by this summer. The recommendations to be covered by these regulations will be:

No. 5—minimum standards of visibility on passenger launches;
No. 15—boatman's licence to be given statutory status;
No. 17—hours of work on river craft.

It is planned that sets of regulations, based on two recommendations, will be in force by this autumn. The recommendations to be covered by these regulations will be:

No. 20—a review of standards of stability and construction on passenger launches;
No. 24—a review of life saving appliance requirements on passenger launches.

In respect of action on recommendation No. 4—to enforce existing guidelines on navigational bridge visibility on sea going ships—the United Kingdom made a submission to the 17th assembly of the International Maritime Organisation (IMO) in 1991, and will be making a submission to the IMO's Maritime Safety Committee during 1992, with a view to the mandatory adoption of the guidelines internationally. Arrangements enabling all relevant United Kingdom ships currently operational to comply with this recommendation should be completed by the end of this month.

Responsibility for recommendation No. 19—a traffic signalling system on the River Thames—lies with the Port of London Authority (PLA). A system of radio-controlled warning lights has been developed by the PLA for 19 London bridges. Commissioning of the lights will take place on 15 February. It is anticipated that there will be a commissioning period of one month prior to final acceptance by the PLA.

Provisional Driving Licences (Application Forms)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will include on the application form for a provisional driving licence a notice informing applicants that they may receive direct mail from private organisations; and if he will provide for applicants for provisional driving licences to opt out of the receipt of direct mail consequent on their completion of the form.

Mr. Chope: Further consideration is being given to the use of DVLA's database for commercial purposes. The concerns of individuals receiving third party mail has been recognised and any decision will take account of this and of the requirements of the Data Protection Act.

Driving Licences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the inclusion of photographs on driving licences; whether the photograph will be digitised and sent to the police national computer; and whether the photograph will be used for official or unofficial identification purposes.

Mr. Christopher Chope: The DVLA is undertaking a feasibility study to determine how best to proceed with the initiative of including photographs on driving licences. Several strategic and administrative issues are being addressed including the technology available, costs and the data protection implications. The DVLA will seek the advice of the data protection registrar.

Police have access to the driver licensing records for law enforcement purposes under the terms of the Road Traffic Act 1988. Schedule 34(5)a of the Data Protection Act 1984 removes any data protection restriction on such statutory disclosure. If photographs of drivers were to form part of those records, then the police will have access to them under the same terms, subject to consultation with the data protection registrar.

A driving licence is a document which indicates an individual's entitlement to drive. It is not, nor is it intended that it should be, an identity document. The law does not require drivers to carry their licence with them and there are no plans to change this.

Car Accidents

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will show the number of car accidents involving drivers aged (a) 17 to 20 years, (b) 21 to 30 years, (c) 31 to 40 years, (d) 41 to 50 years, (e) 51 to 60 years, (f) 61 to 70 years and (g) 70 years and older both as a figure and as a percentage of all drivers in the relevant age category.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is given in the table. Information on the proportion of driving licence holders who are active drivers is not available. This may vary between age groups.

Number of car drivers involved in injury accidents by age: GB 1990 Number of injury accidents involving car drivers of different ages: GB 1990 Percentage of the driving population involved in injury accidents by age: GB 1990

	Number of injury accidents involving car drivers in each age group[1]	Number of car drivers involved in injury accidents	Estimate of number of persons holding a full car driving licence[2] (millions)	Percentage of all car drivers who are involved in injury accidents
17-20	42,763	45,131	1·3	3·6
21-30	89,487	101,674	6·3	1·6
31-40	57,773	63,225	5·9	1·1
41-50	42,250	45,056	5·5	0·8
51-60	25,554	26,579	3·8	0·7

71 and over	9,226	9,469	1·6	0·6
Total[3]	222,772	330,181	27·2	1·2

[1] Accidents involving drivers in more than one age group are included in each relevant row.

[2] Estimate based on population date for 1990 from OPCS and GRO(S) and data on the percentage of the population holding driving licences from the 1988-90 National Travel Survey.

[3] Including younger ages and unknown ages.

Motorway Repairs

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve maintenance on motorways and to speed up the backlog of essential repairs.

Mr. Chope: We shall be announcing plans later this month.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify the consultations including dates of meetings and correspondence on the review of Her Majesty's coastguard in Cornwall with (a) local authorities, (b) coastguard staff and (c) the public.

Mr. McLoughlin: The regional controller of Falmouth search and rescue region consulted all regular coastguard officers and auxiliary coastguards in charge of rescue companies within the region, which includes Cornwall, by means of a first draft regional implementation plan on 5 February 1991. Elements of this plan were widely discussed in Cornwall—we received 33 letters from individuals and organisations between 7 February and 20 March 1991.

The proposals of over 40 regular and auxiliary coastguards were incorporated into the final plan which, as intended, very much reflected local opinion.

The regional controller also personally briefed the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 8 February 1991, and the hon. Member for Truro on 6 July 1991 about the background to the review, as well as five Conservative, Labour and Liberal Democrat prospective parliamentary candidates for Cornish constituencies between 19 February 1991 and January 1992.

The county emergency planning officer for Cornwall was briefed about the review early in February 1991.

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has undertaken on the causes of accidents on motorways.

Mr. Chope: The main causes of motorway accidents, driving too fast and too close to the vehicle in front, have been established for some years. Current departmental research is aimed at developing solutions and includes experiments with chevron markings; yellow bar markings on slip roads; automatic fog and incident detection equipment and advanced variable message signs.

Cycling Helmets

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has undertaken on the effectiveness of cycle helmet wearing.

Mr. Chope: A hospital-based study carried out by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory indicated that cycle helmets reduce the risk of cranial injury by 16 per cent. and of serious cranial injury by 30 per cent.

Pollutants

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for developing pollution reduction strategies for key transport pollutants in areas where repeated breaches occur.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Severe air pollution occurs rarely, and is normally associated with unusual weather conditions. During such periods we advise individuals to use public transport whenever possible, share cars and cut out less important journeys.

We have set in train a number of far reaching measures to reduce motor traffic pollution. New European standards for new cars and heavy diesel vehicles will bring major gains, with tough limits becoming mandatory from the end of the year. The new emissions check in the MOT test should ensure substantial reductions of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons. We intend to introduce a metered smoke test in the annual test for heavy diesels.

We are also taking measures to deal with traffic and congestion. These are a mix of traffic management, parking controls and better public transport. We are supporting high levels of investment in British Rail and the underground, and we have recently produced, in conjunction with the bus industry and the local authorities, advice as to how buses can help ease congestion. We also issue guidance to local authorities on how to help cyclists and pedestrians. We are setting up a programme of research into urban road congestion, which will include an assessment of the potential role of road pricing.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dentists, South Down

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dentist, in the constituency of South Down operate within the national health service; how many operate privately; and what were the figures on 1 January 1987.

Mr. Hanley: The information is available only in respect of those units of management in the Eastern and Southern boards which form all or part of the South Down constituency. The figures for 1 January 1992 also reflect the amalgamation of the Lisburn and Down units of management with effect from 1 April 1990. Details are as follows:

Unit of management	Health service dentists	Private dentists

Irish Language Leaving Certificate

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the students from the Republic of Ireland who have obtained places at university in Northern Ireland in 1990-91 and 1991-92 have passed the Irish language leaving certificate.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers with higher level Irish language leaving certificate were as follows:

	Number
1990-91	168
1991-92	160

Numbers for those with lower level leaving certificates in Irish language are not available.

Nurses and Health Visitors

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) district nurses and (b) health visitors are employed in each of the units of management of each health and social services board in Northern Ireland; and what were the figures on 1 January 1987.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is set out in the following tables:

New Comber High School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has yet received a schedule of accommodation from South Eastern education and library board for the proposed New Comber high school; and if he will make a statement about the progress of this scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: A schedule of accommodation was received by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland in October 1991. A revised schedule has been approved by the Department and returned to the board to enable it to draw up outline plans for the new school.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the revenue expenditure of each regional health authority on health service facilities for patients with a mental handicap for each year since 198[illegible], in cash terms and at 1991 prices.

Mr. Hanley: The information for Northern Ireland is as follows:

Year	Net hospital running costs £	1991 prices £
1980-81	12,732,578	23,380,546
1981-82	14,327,360	23,[illegible]92,497
1982-83	15,271,295	23,872,588
1983-84	15,970,537	23,860,126
1984-85	16,686,465	23,741,822
1985-86	17,391,292	23,450,724
1986-87	17,831,572	23,278,814
1987-88	18,560,576	22,980,964
1988-89	19,944,274	23,039,651
1989-90	20,541,719	22,284,597
1990-91	21,258,075	21,258,075

The figures do not include increasing levels of expenditure on health care in the community for such patients.

Cash Limits

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cash and running cost limits for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland departmental services in 1991-92.

Mr. Brooke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, it is proposed that the cash limit for class 17 vote 1 (the Northern Ireland Office) will be increased by £11,236,000 from £773,396,000 to £784,632,000. This is principally to meet additional expenditure on compensation and police costs.

The cash limit for most Northern Ireland departmental services (NID1) for 1991-92 will be decreased by £47,820,000 from £3,119,703,000 to £3,071,883,000. This decrease arises from the transfer to the Northern Ireland Office cash limit (NIO1) of £10,581,000, the transfer to the Northern Ireland independent living fund (NID2) of £726,000 and other technical changes of £36,513,000 (net), including transfers to non-cash limited areas within the Northern Ireland Departments and a surrender of cash limit cover as a result of repayment of loans.

The cash limit for the Northern Ireland independent living fund (NID2) for 1991-92 will be increased by £726,000 from £2,870,000 to £3,596,000. This increase arises from a revision in the assumptions on which payments from the fund are based.

The Running Cost Limit for Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments will be increased by £3,895,000 from £652,593,000 to £656,488,000 primarily reflecting the take-up of £1,199,000 of the end-year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1991, Official Report, columns 235-40, and the transfer of £2,696,000 from the Department of Social Security in respect of services operated on an agency basis by the Department of Health and Social Services. The revised running cost provision is £162,315,000 for the Northern Ireland Office and [illegible]173,000 for Northern Ireland Departments.

The increase outlined above will not add to the planned total of public expenditure in Northern Ireland in 1991-92.

ENVIRONMENT

Fire Safety

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect multi-seat fires may have on means of escape; and what account has been taken of this within the new Building Regulations.

Mr. Yeo: The means of escape provisions of the Building Regulations have always been based on the assumption that there is unlikely to be more than one seat of fire. Accidental multi-seat fires in buildings are so unlikely that it would not be reasonable to make special provision for them under the regulations.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which the removal of requirements for non-combustible materials and materials of limited combustibility will affect smoke levels and fire load in buildings and the unseen spread of fire and smoke within concealed spaces.

Mr. Yeo: The changes to the guidance on the use of non combustible materials and materials of limited combustibility are not expected to have any significant effect on the smoke levels in buildings, which are determined primarily by the smoke produced by their contents, such as furniture and fittings. Likewise, these changes to the guidance are unlikely to affect the unseen spread of smoke and fire, which is prevented by cavity barriers. The new guidance has not dispensed with controls over the positioning of these barriers, and it takes account of the material lining the cavity.

The fire load is likely to be increased in some buildings where more combustible materials are used in the construction of fire resisting walls and floors. However this is not likely to be of any significance for the overall levels of safety. Because they are fire resisting these elements of construction are unlikely to be heavily involved in a fire until an advanced stage is reached, by which time evacuation would have had to have been completed.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect he expects the deletion of structural non-combustibility requirements from the new building regulations to have on (a) levels of (i) fire severity, (ii) smoke and toxic fumes and (b) likelihood of premature collapse of structures in fires in buildings constructed to the new regulations.

Mr. Yeo: On points (a) (i) and (ii) I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway).

The likelihood of premature collapse should not be affected by the use of combustible materials in the circumstances described in the new guidance to the building regulations. Regardless of their composition fire resisting floors and walls that perform a load bearing function have to maintain that function for the designated test period.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account was taken in drawing up the building regulations tabled on 10 December of the problem of the increasing number of multi-seat fires of deliberate and terrorist origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: While the value of active fire suppression systems against attacks of deliberate and terrorist origin has been highlighted by the recent spate of incidents, and the new building regulation guidance would have the effect of increasing the number of such installations, the regulations are not an efficient way of countering this problem, compared with good management practices tailored to the particular circumstances, and the vigilance of all concerned. There is a long lead time between changes to the regulations and changes to a significant proportion of the building stock, by which time the nature of the problem may well have changed.

Housing Finance

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total outstanding housing revenue debt at 31 March 1991, the unredeemed reserved part of capital receipts at 31 March 1990 and 31 March 1991 and the total of housing revenue account 1990-91 in year receipts applied to debt redemption in that year.

Mr. Yeo: The reserved part of capital receipts was £4·2 billion at 31 March 1990 and £5·1 billion at 31 March 1991. Information about the total outstanding housing revenue account debt at 31 March 1991 is not yet complete. It is not possible to say how much of the in-year receipts are applied to debt redemption because there is no need for authorities' accounts to relate debt redemption to particular receipts.

Rents, Yorkshire

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the level of rents in (a) Wakefield, (b) Leeds, (c) Kirklees, (d) Bradford and (e) Calderdale.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information on average local authority rents per dwelling for the financial year 1991-92 is as follows:

	£ per week
Wakefield	20·22
Leeds	18·70
Kirkless	24·36
Bradford	25·98
Calderdale	24·93

Average annual rents for fair rent tenancies re-registered in 1990-91 and the first quarter 1991 for the West Yorkshire area are published in Department of the Environment Statistical Bulletin (91)3, which is in the Library. This publication also gives details of rents in housing benefit cases referred to rent officers under the Housing Act 1988.

Rating Appeals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals were settled since 1 April 1990 in respect of (a) the pre-national non-domestic rates valuations and (b) the NNDR valuations; and how many rating appeals in each category are still outstanding.

Mr. Portillo: The information concerning appeals to valuation and community charge tribunals in England is as follows:

	Cleared between 1 April 1990 and 31 December 1991	Outstanding at 31 December 1991
1973 Rating appeals	182,000	4,000
1990 Non-domestic rating appeals	142,000	589,000

Appeals cleared relate to those heard and decided by tribunals or withdrawn or agreed prior to or after hearing.

Many of the 4,000 outstanding 1973 appeals were awaiting decisions by the Court of Appeal in related cases. Most of the 1990 non-domestic rating appeals were not received in tribunals until towards the end of 1990-91.

Leigh Barton

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much public expenditure has been incurred on Leigh Barton; and for how many years it has been in his ownership;

(2) how many years Leigh Barton, near Churstow has been closed to the public; and when it is planned to be reopened.

Mr. Yeo: Leigh Barton was purchased from Devon county council by the Secretary of State for the Environment in April 1974, at a cost of £4,850, and has been in English Heritage's guardianship since 1984. To date, the total estimated costs of maintenance and repair at the property amount to about £300,000.

SSA, Cumbria

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the methodology used by his Department in calculating the standard spending assessment for Cumbria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Cumbria submitted detailed written representations about the proposals for 1992-93 and also brought a delegation to see my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State. The points made by Cumbria were given careful consideration, as were all other representations. Cumbria's standard spending assessment increased by £0·266 million between that issued for consultation purposes and the settlement figure.

Flora and Fauna

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for England and Wales the number of species of (a) flora and (b) fauna that have become extinct since the introduction of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Baldry: It is probable that no species of flora and five species of fauna have become extinct in England and Wales since the introduction of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of (a) the 100 acre site of special scientific interest at Birkham wood, Harrogate, (b) the 25 acre site of special scientific interest at Shirley Pool and Rushley Moor wetlands, (c) the 2,000 acre site of special scientific interest at Ingleborough moors, Yorkshire and (d) the 1,000 acre site of special scientific interest at Yorkshire Wolds Chalk Grasslands.

Mr. Baldry: I will write to the hon. Member with the details requested.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to prevent any developments which damage sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Baldry: Additional safeguards for SSSIs were announced in DOE circular 1/92. These measures together with other statutory provisions set out in the Countryside Act 1968, Wildlife and Countryside Acts of 1981 and 1985 and the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 ensure that the special interest of these sites is taken fully into account when development proposals are considered.

Departmental Research and Advice

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all research and advice commissioned by his Department from external organisations or consultants, in connection with part II of the Local Government Bill indicating (a) the terms of reference, (b) the cost, (c) when the work was completed and (d) if the work will be published.

Mr. Portillo: We have commissioned CSL Ltd. to advise on the costs and benefits the Local Government Commission might take into account in assessing cases for structural change, and the means by which such costs and benefits could be measured. We hope to make CSL's report available soon.

We have also commissioned social researcher Mr. Alan Hedges to look at means of developing and refining criteria which might be applied to the assessment of community identity and loyalties, and which might be amenable to testing by means of surveys of public habits and attitudes in a given local area; and the Centre for Urban and Regional Development Studies in Newcastle university to consider the application of geographical information systems in the definition of community boundaries with a view to developing a suitable methodology which the Commission might use. We will decide how to disseminate the results of those studies when we have the final reports.

It is not our policy to reveal the value of individual contracts.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure correlation between local authority community care plans and future standard spending assessments for personal social services.

Mr. Portillo: Standard spending assessments are the Government's measure of the cost of providing a standard level of service across all local authorities taking account of their social, geographic and demographic characteristics and the services for which they are responsible. Community care plans reflect locally determined service priorities within available resources.

Soft Landscaping

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a planning policy guidance note along the lines proposed by the Horticultural Traders Association dealing with soft landscaping in association with development proposals.

Mr. Yeo: Trees, plants and shrubs can enhance the appearance of developments and I commend the action of the Horticultural Traders Association in bringing this to the attention of local planning authorities.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account is taken of specific needs which have to be met on a regional rather than local level in the calculation of standard spending assessments for personal social services.

Mr. Portillo: A personal social services standard spending assessment is allocated to each social services authority in England based on its social and demographic characteristics. The standard spending assessment covers the full range of social services not supported by specific grant.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he takes of existing levels of service in the calculation of standard spending assessments for the personal social services.

Mr. Portillo: The standard spending assessment for personal social services is based on demographic and social indicators which best reflect the cost of providing a standard level of service. It takes no direct account of existing levels of service provision.

Combustion Plants

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the deadline by which large combustion plants should have been granted their licence from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and how many plants had been licensed by that date;

(2) how many power stations owned by PowerGen and National Power have received the required licence from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list all large combustion plants covered by the Environmental Protection Act 1990 indicating the owners; and whether they have been granted the licence, required under the Act from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Baldry: Applications for authorisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 were received for 203 combustion processes of which 150 are large combustion plants; a list of these plants has been placed in the Library of the House. These should be determined within four months of receipt, or within such longer period as may be agreed with the applicant. But, in cases where commercial confidentiality has been claimed in respect of information contained in an application, this period of four months does not begin until that matter has been resolved, at which time public advertisement and consultation can take place.

On receipt of the applications, HMIP found that additional information was required from all applicants, including PowerGen and National Power, to enable the determination of their authorisation to proceed. In seeking such information, in accordance with schedule 1 of the 1990 Act, the four-month deadline for determining applications was extended, by varying periods. Nineteen authorisations for large combustion plant had been granted by 4 February 1992. PowerGen and National Power originally requested information in 34 of their applications (14 PowerGen and 20 National Power) to be considered as commercially confidential. HMIP refused these requests and the applicants appealed to the Secretary of State against the decision. Appeals (by National Power) in two cases were withdrawn at the end of 1991 and determination of those applications is now proceeding. Thirty-two cases remain subject to appeal.

Until the applications are determined, all existing plants remain subject to control by HMIP under existing air pollution legislation.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the measures undertaken by his Department to achieve the target set for the proportion of household waste to be recycled by 2000; and what is the estimated impact of each measure.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the document "This Common Inheritance—The First Year Report", published in September 1991. Since then we have published a report on deposit and refund systems for beverage containers and batteries. We have commissioned a major study of economic instruments necessary to encourage the recovery of resources from waste. These reports, together with the waste recycling plans now being prepared by every waste collection authority in the country, will enable us to assess the extent of any further action that we will need to take in order to achieve our aim of minimising waste and the target of recycling 25 per cent. of household waste by the end of the decade.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and indicate the estimated reduction for each initiative by (a) 2000 and (b) 2005.

Mr. Baldry: The Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200) set out the Government's strategy and a first tranche of measures towards Britain's conditional target of returning CO_2 emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2005. The first year report (Cm 1655) set out progress with this strategy.

The savings from this first tranche of measures have been taken into account in the latest scenarios for United Kingdom CO_2 emissions announced by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Energy, on 6 December 1991. Details of these new scenarios are being prepared for publication.

Housing Management

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he will publish his consultation paper on extending compulsory competitive tendering to housing management.

Sir George Young: I expect to publish it shortly.

Kent Rent Arrears

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the rent arrears of each local housing authority in the county of Kent, as a percentage and in cash terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Housing and Planning on 3 February 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) at column 4.

Local Authority Housing (Applications)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities do not accept housing applications from young single people.

Mr. Yeo: The available information on local authority waiting lists does not separately identify young single people. Under the homelessness legislation, local authorities have a duty to accept responsibility to secure accommodation for young single people who are unintentionally homeless and judged to be in priority need because they are vulnerable. In addition, in the last two quarters a total of 62 local authorities reported securing permanent accommodation under the homelessness legislation, for other young single people.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any proposals to change the 1991-92 cash limit and the net running cost limit for ordnance survey.

Mr. Baldry: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary spring supplementary estimate, the cash limit for ordnance survey, class VIII, vote 12 will be increased by £500,000 from £21,089,000 to £21,589,000. The increase will be charged to the reserve and not therefore added to the planned total of public expenditure. The increase to the cash limit is due to a greater payover of value added tax (VAT) to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise caused by a reduction in capital and running cost expenditure for which OS can reclaim VAT together with the higher sales of OS products which attract VAT.

In addition, the supplementary estimate is required to reflect a shortfall of £2,100,000 in the receipts from the sales of maps and public sector repayment services due to a reduction in the demand for OS products. This shortfall is to be offset by a reduction in capital expenditure of £2,100,000 with no effect on the cash limit.

As a result of the shortfall in receipts the net running cost limit will be increased by £2,070,000 from £21,730,000 to £23,800,000.

Cash Limits

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1991-92.

Mr. Heseltine: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the following changes will be made:

(i) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 2 (miscellaneous housing administration and grants) will be increased by £1,700,000 from £195,907,000 to £197,607,000. The increase reflects a transfer a £1,700,000 from the non-voted provision for housing action trusts for borrowing from the national loans funds to grant-in-aid which is voted in estimates. In additions, the running costs provision for rent assessment panels will be increased by £43,000 to £1,904,000 to support the provision of information technology to the panels. This increase in running costs provision will be met from equivalent savings within the running costs provision on class VIII, vote 8, so that the Department's running costs limit remains unaffected by this change;

(ii) The DOE/HC non-voted cash limit will be increased by £950,000 from £1,520,925,000 to £1,521,875,000. This increase results from full take up of entitlement of £950,000 under the end year flexibility scheme for capital projects concerned with schemes for the homeless;

(iii) The DOE/UA non-voted cash limit will be increased by £6,617,000 from £883,814,000 to £890,431,000. This includes increased grant-in-aid of £8,850,000 to the Black Country development corporation for the black country spine road. This increase will be offset by a corresponding reduction in the Department of Transport's cash limit for class VII, vote 1 (national roads, England). In addition, £13,280,000 is required for various projects for other development corporations, to increase resources for local authority sector derelict land grant, and to make payments of urban programme grant and city action team grant where works have progressed faster than anticipated. The costs will be met, in part, from offsetting savings of £12,000,000 on the city grant programme and other savings totalling £3,513,000 from non local authority derelict land grant, urban development grant and inner cities research.

(iv) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 5 (central environmental services, etx) will be reduced by £9,000,000 from £317,840,000 to £308,840,000. The decrease reflects reduced grant-in-aid requirements by the National Rivers Authority.

(v) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 6, (royal palaces, royal parks, historic buildings, etc) will be increased by £71,000 from £176,484,000 to £176,555,000. The increase of £71,000 is required to cover the cost of new charges by the Civil Service Commission for services provided to the Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England, and by the Treasury solicitors for services provided to the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission. These increases are offset by equivalent transfers of provision from class VIII, vote 8 (Department of the Environment: administration). In addition, the running costs provision for royal parks will be increased by £600,000 mainly to meet the redundancy and consultancy costs associated with contracting out gardening services. This increase in provision for royal parks will be met from savings within the vote, but the running cost provision on class VIII, vote 8 will be reduced by an equivalent amount so the Department's running cost limit remains unaffected by this change;

(vi) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 8 (Department of the Environment: administration) will be increased by £201,000 from £188,417,000 to £188,618,000. This increase includes a transfer of £200,000 from class VIII, vote 3 (urban aid and derelict land reclamation, England) for costs associated with Manchester's bid for Olympics in the year 2000, and a transfer of £71,000 to class VIII, vote 6 (royal palaces, royal parks, historic buildings, etc) as outlined above. The Department's running cost limit will be reduced by £4,541,000 from £190,061,000 to £185,520,000. The decrease includes reallocation of resources from running costs to non-running costs within this vote, and the equivalent offset to the running cost increases for rent assessment panels on class VIII, vote 2 and for royal parks on class VIII, vote 6, as outlined above;

(vii) The cash limit for class VIII, vote 9 (revenue support grant, payment of non-domestic rates, valuation office rating and valuation services, etc., England) will be decreased by £52,686,000 from £22,759,344,000 to £22,706,658,000. The decrease reflects lower costs in payments to the valuation office, for implementation work on the council tax; and (viii) The DOE/LACAP non-voted cash limit will be increased by £2,710,000 from £3,016,492,000 to £3,019,202,000. This represents an increase of £3,000,000 for projects to help the homeless, partly offset by a decrease of £290,000 due to lower than expected take up of estate action grant.

These increases will be charged to the reserve and not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

2 Marsham Street, London

Sir Philip Goodhart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on the future of 2 Marsham street, London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: We have decided to knock it down. No. 2 Marsham street is a Crown building which houses most of the headquarters staff of my Department and of the Department of Transport. The building is in need of major repair. Following detailed technical studies I am satisfied that repairs on the scale necessary would not be desirable. I have therefore decided that the existing building should be demolished. Options for the future of the site including sale, are now being considered.

The decision to demolish 2 Marsham street means that alternative accommodation has to be found for some 3,000 staff in my Department and the Department of Transport. The Secretary of State for Transport and I are considering our Departments' needs and how they can best be met. For my part, I have asked my officials to draw up proposals for moving a substantial number of the present Department of the Environment Headquarters posts to other locations, reducing my Department's requirement for accommodation in the central Westminster area. I have asked them particularly to examine the opportunities and value for money of relocation to docklands, where I am considering establishing a significant Departmental presence.

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are being made available under the derelict land grant programme in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The resources available in 1992-93 for derelict land reclamatgion under the derelict land grant programme will be £106 million. This represents an increase of 21 per cent. on this year's provision. £9 million of this total has been earmarked for reclamation schemes carried out by private sector companies and voluntary organisations such as groundwork trusts. The remainder has been allocated for reclamation schemes operated by local authorities.

The reclamation of derelict and often seriously contaminated land plays a vital role in recycling previously developed land and returning it to beneficial use. This helps to improve the environment and ensure that the use of greenfield sites for development is kept to a minimum. Since 1979 DLG has funded the reclamation of 15,500 hectares and I expect a further 1,500 hectares to be reclaimed next year.

New priorities and guidelines for DLG were announced in May 1991 introducing greater flexibility in the type of reclamation schemes which can be supported by DLG throughout England. Local authorities applying for DLG are being encouraged to prepare reclamation strategies which are expected to show an increased emphasis on reclamation for environmental and amenity improvement.

In urban and inner city areas we will continue to give priority to reclaiming sites for use by industry and commerce, and for housing provision; providing a demand for these sites has been clearly demonstrated. But environmental improvement can also make an important contribution to urban regeneration and a large number of DLG reclamation schemes designed to provide a new amenity and recreational provision in urban areas is planned to start in 1992-93.

On the urban fringe and in rural areas, DLG will also be widely used for environmental improvement. A range of such schemes is planned for next year which will include the use of derelict land for community forests, the reclamation of derelict canals for amenity use and the conversion of derelict railways into long distance footpaths and cycleways.

I have also decided how the total resources available for DLG should be divided between regions and this distribution is given in the table. Most DLG will go to the northern and midland regions where the concentration of dereliction is greatest. The north-west region and Yorkshire and Humberside will receive £21 million each, (representing increases of 15 per cent. and 25 per cent. respectively compared with last year's allocations). The west midlands wil also receive £20·5 million (14 per cent. up on last year), including £9·21 million for investigative and infilling work in connection with the disused limestone mines in that region.

Table 1 Derelict Land Grant Programme: Distribution of resources by region for 1992-93

Region	Allocation for 1992-93 (£ million)	Percentage increase on this year's allocation
Northern	12·4	14
North West	21·0	15
Merseyside	8·6	13
Yorkshire and Humberside	21·0	25
West Midlands	20·5	14
East Midlands	13·0	21
London	2·0	43
South West	4·5	72
South East	1·2	77
Eastern	1·0	19
Unallocated	0·8	—
Total	106·0	21

The number of rolling programmes of reclamation has also been substantially increased for 1992-93. In total there will be 26 in operation accounting for £50·5 million of DLG expenditure, with five new programmes starting in Northumberland, Sunderland, Durham, the Croal/Irwell valley and St Helens. Also project Furness will be extended to the whole of the local authority area. Rolling programmes are subject to a review after three years of operation and, following such reviews this year, the Leeds/Liverpool canal corridor programme will be extended to include Rossendale and the major programme at Salford quays will be extended for another three years to complete reclamation there.

Reclamation in areas subject to colliery closures has been an important priority for DLG and will continue to be so in 1992-93. £21 million of DLG resources are planned to be spent in coalfield areas. DLG is now being used in these areas to concentrate on collieries closed before March 1990. British Coal has agreed to take financial responsibility for the reclamation of collieries closing since then and the combined effect of these twin programmes will add increased momentum to the pace of reclamation and regeneration in the coalfields.

Priority is also being given under the DLG programme to dealing with derelict sites which are also badly contaminated. The reclamation costs for such sites are often much higher than average, but need to be dealt with urgently for reasons of public health and safety. In total it is likely that about £25 million of DLG will be committed towards such major schemes, involving seriously contaminated sites, on which work is likely to start next year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which 20 local authorities have the most outstanding community charge payments; and what are the figures.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 4 February 1992]: Information is available about the arrears of community charge at 31 March 1991 for 358 out of 366 charging authorities. Of those authorities for which information is available the following have the highest arrears in terms of amounts outstanding.

	£ million
Birmingham	60·4
Lambeth	50·1
Brent	32·4
Bristol	31·2
Leeds	31·2
Hackney	27·7
Sheffield	26·0
Haringey	23·7
Leicester	23·3
Ealing	22·1
Southwark	21·6
Newham	21·5
Islington	20·3
Nottingham	18·2
Waltham Forest	17·4
Camden	16·5
Sandwell	16·3
Wirral	15·5
Newcastle upon Tyne	14·4
Walsall	13·9

It should be noted that no information is available for Liverpool, Manchester, Coventry, Northampton, Oxford, Derwentside, Newbury and Oswestry.

Contaminated Land

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a right of appeal to a landowner or occupier from the decision of a local authority including his land on a register of potentially contaminated sites and for deregistration to be undertaken in the event of appropriate clean-up measures having been taken.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 4 February 1992]: Local authorities compiling registers under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will be required to record all land which is, or has been, subject to specific contaminative uses to be listed in regulations. An objection to the registration of a site could thus be based only on a factual question concerning the site's use, and therefore no formal appeal procedure is considered necessary. However, an authority which refused to correct an error would lay itself open to judicial review or civil legal action.

Under section 143 sites cannot be deregistered after treatment, but registers will record details of any investigation or treatment which may have been carried out. Treatment rarely removes all contamination, and purchasers, planners and developers will continue to require information on the history and treatment of sites. Contamination from a site may also affect other land or water, and purchasers of affected land and bodies responsible for environmental protection will need to refer to registers for information on the sources of such contamination.

In addition, deregistration of sites after treatment would have to be carried out by the local authorities responsible for registers. They would thus give an implicit assurance that the site in question was free from contamination. This would raise questions of liability if contamination was later found still to be present. It is unlikely that many authorities would be willing to give such an undertaking.

Water Pollution

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many successful prosecutions the National Rivers Authority has achieved since its inception, for pollution of (a) the River Trent and (b) other rivers and seas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that between 1 September 1989 and 30 November 1991 the National Rivers Authority—NRA—brought 1,104 successful prosecutions for water pollution offences in England and Wales. Of these 239 arose in the Severn Trent region. Information on prosecutions for pollution of individual rivers is not centrally available, although details could be obtained from the NRA's regional office.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Companies (Trade Aid)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which company or companies were the beneficiaries of the aid and trade provision made available for projects involving (a) Turkey, (b) Morocco, (c) Panama, (d) Jordan, (e) India, (f) China and (g) Malaysia for 1991.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1991 aid and trade provision funds were disbursed in respect of projects in these countries involving United Kingdom lead companies:

(a) Turkey
  British Gas
  Amec International Construction
  TQ International
  Hallam Associates
  Thames Water International

(b) Morocco
  John Brown Engineering

(c) Panama
  John Brown Engineering

(d) Jordan
  Ransome and Rapier

(e) India
  GEC Turbine Generators
  Boving

(f) China
  GEC Turbine Generators
  Plessey Controls
  The MVA Consultancy
  Dunlop International Projects
  Balfour Beatty
  Metrotec Group
  Mott MacDonald
  Davy McKee (Poole)
  British Shipbuilders
  Platt Saco Lowell UK
  GPT International
  Snamprogetti

(g) Malaysia
  John Laing International
  Balfour Beatty
  Sir William Halcrow and Partners
  Acer John Taylor
  Transmark International
  Knight Piesold and Partners

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Government publications are designed to explain to companies the purpose and the benefits of the aid trade provision; and from which government department these government publications can be procured.

Mrs. Chalker: The purpose and benefits of the aid and trade provision are explained in the ATP "Guidelines for Applicants" booklet. This may be obtained from the Projects and Export Policy division of the Department of Trade and Industry or from the Crown Agents, CDC and ATP Department of the Overseas Development Administration. Copies of the booklet have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Agricultural Specialists

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many full-time agricultural specialists the Overseas Development Agency has overseas at present; and how many of them are women.

Mrs. Chalker: The Overseas Development Administration has 10 headquarters staff members working as full-time agricultural specialists overseas, of whom one is a woman. In addition we have a total of 106 contract officers employed overseas on technical co-operation assignments of whom 10 are women. This figure includes 16 staff from our agency, the Natural Resources Institute, all of whom are men.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made in the 1991-92 cash limit for expenditure by the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit on the Overseas Aid Vote (class II vote 5) will be increased by £22,188,000 from £1,638,342,000 to £1,660,530,000. The increase primarily provides for additional bilateral assistance to the former Soviet Union. The supplementary also provides for an increase of £900,000 in the net running costs limit of the Natural Resources Institute. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

VAT

Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Prime Minister if he will indicate the provisions (a) under which the EC could propose an increase in the VAT rate in the United Kingdom and (b) under which the United Kingdom may veto the proposal.

The Prime Minister: No such proposal exists. Under the provisions of article 99 of the treaty of Rome, the Commission of the European Community could, in theory, propose for example, a minimum standard rate higher than that in the United Kingdom. However any such proposal, in common with all fiscal matters under article 99 of the treaty, would be subject to unanimity and thus the United Kingdom retains an absolute right of veto.

Peru

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the President of Peru on biodiversity in the Peruvian rain-forest and its protection.

The Prime Minister: I discussed with President Fujimori the forthcoming UN Conference on Environment and Development. I emphasised the importance we attach to effective conventions on climate change and biodiversity, as well as an agreement on principles for the sustainable use and management of all types of forest.

RECHAR

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will make a study of the differences in United Kingdom and Italian practice in the use of regional funds, such as RECHAR.

The Prime Minister: Members of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Community visited Italy in October 1991 during their inquiry into EEC regional development policy. Their report has been published and is available in the Library.

Italy is not eligible for RECHAR.

Communist Party (Meetings)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all meetings by (a) Ministers and (b) officials of Her Majesty's Government with (i) Ministers, (ii) diplomats and (iii) other Communist party officials of the former Soviet Union since May 1979 in (1) the United Kingdom and (2) elsewhere; and what were the purposes of the ministerial and diplomatic meetings.

The Prime Minister: Detailed information of this kind is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. There are, however, frequent contacts with Ministers and officials of the former Soviet Union at all levels on questions of mutual interest.

Disarmament Paper

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will obtain for the library at 10 Downing street a copy of the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs topical paper No. 5 (1991), "Conversion: Economic Adjustments in an Era of Arms Reductions" (Volume II).

The Prime Minister: The publication is available from the United Nations documents section in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office from where copies will be obtained as required.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 6 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 505, whether Schroder Wagg's appointment as head underwriters to the regional electricity companies sale was by competitive tender.

Mr. Wakeham: Yes.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy further to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 505, if he will list those advisers whose appointments were not subject to competitive tender.

Mr. Wakeham: The five appointments referred to in that answer as not subject to competitive tender were:

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (AGR output).
J. Henry Schroder Wagg (Trade sale).
John Chiene (Pricing).
Professor Littlechild (Regulatory).
R. L. Associates (Setting X for Area Boards).

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the initiatives taken by his Department to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and indicate the estimated reduction for each initiative by (a) 2000 and (b) 2005.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income and Benefit Levels

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all benefits payable to those with incomes over £25,000 a year; how many in this income category receive them; what is the total cost of each benefit to persons with these incomes; and what is the average value of the benefit to those above this income level.

Mr. Jack: The main social security benefits which are not income-related, and could therefore be payable, provided other criteria are met, to benefit units with incomes over £25,000 a year, are as follows:

Retirement pension
Christmas Bonus
Widows' Benefits
Unemployment Benefit[1]
Sickness Benefit
Statutory Sick Pay
Invalidity Benefit
Industrial Disablement Benefit
Industrial Death Benefit
Maternity Allowance
Statutory Maternity Pay
Non-contributory Retirement Pension
Invalid Care Allowance
Severe Disablement Allowance
Attendance Allowance[2]
Mobility Allowance
Child Benefit
One Parent Benefit
War Disablement Pension
War Widows' Pension

[1] Unemployment benefit is not paid to those with earnings in excess of £52 a week, and those aged 55 or over and getting more than £35 a week under an occupational or personal pension scheme have their unemployment benefit reduced by 10p for every 10p of pension over £35.

[2] Mobility allowance and attendance allowance will be replaced by disability living allowance in April 1992 for those who become disabled before aged 65.

It is not possible to give meaningful information for these benefits individually, because the sample sizes are too small to draw reliable data from. Details of claimants' incomes are not collected routinely, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits (Capital Disregards)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will increase the £3,000 capital disregard on income support and housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The limit below which capital is completely ignored continues to be kept under review, as with all aspects of the benefit system, but there are no plans to change it at present.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state for each year since 1979 the numbers of claimants of supplementary benefit or income support towards the cost of private residential care who have subsequently claimed benefit towards the costs of private nursing care and then again claimed towards the cost of private residential care.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in the Wakefield benefit office's area are currently claiming towards the cost of (a) private nursing care, (b) private residential care and (c) voluntary nursing or residential care.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Building Society Accounts

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will meet the Building Societies Association to discuss the imposition of charges on small accounts and the implications for pensioners and other recipients of state benefits paid direct into such accounts.

Miss Widdecombe: We have already been in contact with the Building Societies Association (BSA). I understand that the Halifax building society is the only BSA member currently planning to make such charges. People who wish their benefits payments to be made into an account at another building society should contact their local social security office and with details of the new account. The procedure involved is a simple one and the staff there will be happy to help them.

Cash Limits

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there have been any changes in the cash limits or running costs limits of his Department for 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit for class XIV, vote 4 (administration and miscellaneous services) will be increased by £22,716,000 from £1,901,217,000 to £1,923,933,000. The revision takes account of the additional administrative expenditure arising from new procedures for the payment of mortgage interest in respect of income support recipients (£10,881,000), an increase in agency payments to Department of Employment (class VI, vote 2) (£30,000,000), a transfer to Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) vote 3 of £1,161,000, a transfer from Department of Health (class XIII, vote 3) of £819,000, a transfer from Property Services Agency of the Department of the Environment (class VIII, vote 13) of £260,000, a transfer from Department of Employment: Employment Service (class VI, vote 2) of £657,000, a transfer to Department of Health (class XIII, vote 3) of £50,000 and a transfer to Scottish Office (class XV, vote 20) of £35,000). The additional requirements are partially offset by an increase in receipts of £18,655,000 and the balance (£22,226,000) will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

In addition to the running cost increases included above there is also an increase of £6,790,000 to take account of expenditure previously classified as capital now being regarded as running costs.

As a result of these changes the running costs limit of the Department of Social Security will be increased by £9,145,000 from £2,149,908,000 to £2,159,053,000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Adoption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each of the last three years, (a) how many children have been brought into the United Kingdom for adoption through private or unauthorised channels, (b) out of that total how many of these adoptions were found to be unsuitable and (c) what was the average waiting time for adoption/immigration authorisation relating to children from (i) Romania, (ii) Brazil and (iii) Colombia.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Only very limited information is available except in relation to Romanian children brought here during the last two years. In 1990, 83, and in 1991, 13 Romanian children were brought to the United Kingdom without entry clearance with a view to adoption. No Romanian children have been brought to the United Kingdom without entry clearance so far this year. The average waiting time for decisions on entry clearance applications made on behalf of Romanian children for the purpose of adoption was approximately six weeks in 1991. Information is not held centrally on the progress and outcome of subsequent adoption proceedings in the United Kingdom.

Punt-Gunning

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many black powder licences were issued in each of the last three years, by county, for the purpose of punt-gunning.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the numbers of black powder licences—which were superseded on 1 November 1991 by explosives certificates—issued by chief officers, and their purpose, is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for each of the last five years for which figures are available the number of persons granted right of permanent stay broken down by country of origin.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on persons accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in the years 1986-90, by nationality, is published in table 14 of the Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1990" (Cm 1571), a copy of which is in the Library. Corresponding information for 1991 is not yet available.

Mr. John Kamara

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reach a decision regarding the case of Mr. J. Kamara, a constituent of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside, who is serving a prison sentence.

Mr. John Patten: I expect to receive a police report on the many inquiries conducted in this case very soon. I will then be in a position to decide whether any action on my part is appropriate.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the names of the people who have written to him concerning the case of John Kamara, a prisoner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No. It is not our practice to publish the names of persons who have contacted us about individual cases. We have received many letters including more than 100 from Members of Parliament and Members of the European Parliament.

Cash Limits

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1991-92 cash limits within his responsibilities and to his Department's running costs limit.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit on class IX, vote 2, prisons, England and Wales, will be increased by £137,000,000 which, after the surrender of the increase of £3,949,000 for end-year flexibility announced by my right hon. Friend, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, on 17 July 1991, Official Report, columns 185-88, will increase from £1,332,391,000 to £1,469,391,000. The additional provision is necessary because of the continuing need to pay for the cost of keeping prisoners in police cells. Extra provision is also necessary to meet the construction costs of new prisons and for the accelerated integral sanitation programme. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The cash limit on class IX, vote 3 will be reduced by £19,000,000 from £890,952,000 to £871,952,000, to reflect a transfer of resources to class IX, vote 1 for the purpose of criminal injuries compensations payments and a special grant to the Northumbria police authority.

The Home Office running cost limit will remain unchanged at £1,304,000,000.

Firemen

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of (a) full-time firemen and (b) part-time firemen employed in the United Kingdom for each year since 1981.

Mr. John Patten: The information for England and Wales is given in the table. Questions relating to the fire service in other parts of the United Kingdom are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Year	Number of full-time firefighters	Number of part-time (retained) firefighters[1]
1981	34,223	15,745
1982	34,117	15,535
1983	34,206	15,887
1984	34,536	16,129
1985	34,575	16,144
1986	34,783	16,138
1987	34,515	15,984
1988	35,011	16,126
1989	34,784	15,861
1990	35,002	15,959
1991	35,162	16,025

[1] These figures include wholetime firefighters with retained obligations

Betting Offices

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received concerning the consultative document on the evening opening of licensed betting offices; and when he hopes to make a statement on his conclusions;

(2) how many letters he has received for, and how many letters against, the evening opening of betting offices; and for how long he is prepared to consider further representations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since issuing our consultation document on the evening opening hours of licensed betting offices on 14 October, we have received representations on both the principle and the practicalities of evening opening of licensed betting offices. We have received 27 letters in favour of evening opening and 518 letters against it, as well as a petition against evening opening with some 1,650 signatures. A number of the letters on both sides represent the views of trade associations or other interest groups.

We are now considering the representations received, in the light of which some further consultations may be necessary. It is not possible to predict at this stage how quickly that work can be completed, but we are prepared to consider further representations in the meantime.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he is giving to the precise times of evening opening of betting offices and days of the week and, specifically, the opening of betting offices on Sundays.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Our consultation document set out the main options for regulating the times and days of evening opening. We are considering the views expressed in response to that document before deciding whether betting offices should be allowed to open in the evenings and, if so, at what times. The consultation exercise does not extend to Sunday opening of betting offices on which we have no present plans to legislate.

Street Deaths

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the figures for deaths on public streets in (i) London, (ii) Manchester, (iii) Birmingham, (iv) Liverpool and (v) England and Wales due to causes other than violence or road traffic accidents for the periods 1 October 1990 to 30 April 1991; and for the year ended 31 December 1991.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that to answer this question would involve disproportionate cost.

Poland (Visas)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about visa requirements relating to Poland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Last year about 120 representations were received from right hon. and hon. Members about the visa requirement for Polish nationals, and about 50 letters from members of the public.

A recent review of the visa requirement has led my right hon. Friend to conclude that it is too soon to assess the experience of some of our European partners who have abolished visas for polish nationals. My right hon. Friend has decided therefore to look again at the need for this requirement in the summer when the effect of visa abolition on other member states of the Community should be clearer.

Solicitors' Telephone Calls

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate allegations by the Criminal Law Solicitors Association that telephone calls from solicitors to prisoners held by the City of London police are recorded and stored on tape.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the City of London that until recently all telephone calls to custody suites were tape recorded at a point after they had left the public network. This was done for operational purposes and overlooked the fact that privileged conversations between solicitors and their clients were also covered. Recordings of privileged conversations were never listened to by police officers and the tapes were held centrally in conditions of strict security, with access controlled by a senior officer and requiring knowledge of confidential codes. As soon as it was realised that privileged conversations were on tape, separate telephone lines which are not subject to tape recording were installed in custody suites.

Mrs. Bushra Ahmed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has made a formal complaint to the appellate authorities at their failure to formally advise his Department of their refusal to grant leave to appeal to the IAT in the case of Mrs. Bushra Ahmed (IMP A399195/2); what prompted the file to come to light in May 1991; and for what reasons Mrs. Ahmed, to date, has not been issued with a visa following his advice to the post to issue her with a visa on 31 May 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 23 January 1992]: The records kept by the immigration appellate authorities show that copies of the immigration appeals tribunal's determination refusing the Home Office leave to appeal against the adjudicator's decision to allow Mrs. Ahmed's appeal were sent out on 30 January 1990. It appears, however, that the determination was not at that stage received by the Home Office presenting officer. He noticed this in December 1990 when the file was brought forward by the procedures intended to track the progress of appeals. Unfortunately there was then some further delay within the Immigration and Nationality Department, which despite investigation cannot be accounted for, before the determination was forwarded to the high commission in Islamabad on 31 May 1991. I understand that the adjudicator's determination allowing Mrs. Ahmed's appeal arrived at the high commission on 12 June 1991 but there was then a clerical error and the papers were put away before a visa was issued.

The high commission wrote to Mrs. Ahmed on 16 December 1991 inviting her to call in to collect her visa. To date she has not done so and a further invitation was sent on 23 January.

I greatly regret the combination of errors which led to the issue of a visa to Mrs. Ahmed being so badly delayed. Officials are examining the procedures which are followed in such cases, in order to prevent any recurrence.

Bail Offenders

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce his conclusions following the review of the recent studies of offending on bail.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 23 January, col. 314]: My Department has published today research and planning unit paper 65 "Offending while on bail: a survey of recent studies". A copy has been placed in the Library. The Government are considering, in the light of the survey, what further action is needed to reduce offending on bail, and we will make an announcement shortly.

Fire Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the total number of business premises that have been damaged by fires caused by (a) arson, (b) accident and (c) unknown causes during each of the past 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 3 February 1992]: The available information relates to fires attended by local authority fire brigades and is shown in the following table.

Fires in business premises[1] attended by local authority fire brigades by supposed cause of fire, 1981-90

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Meale: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the numbers of mortgage repossessions in the Nottinghamshire and Mansfield areas by county court division for each year since 1979.

The Attorney-General: The figures for the number of repossessions are not collected. The only information available on mortgage possession is the number of actions entered and orders made in each county court. The tables give the information for each county court in Nottinghamshire from 1987—the earliest year for which it is available. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all of the orders made will have resulted in the execution of warrants of possession. At this stage the 1991 figures are provisional and therefore liable to revision in the future.

Cash Limits

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General whether any change has been made to the cash limit for the Treasury Solicitor's Department.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class X vote 9 will be increased by £743,000 from £11,865,000 to £12,608,000.

The additional provision is required to meet the cost of major accommodation works and the cost of the inquiry into the supervision of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General whether he proposes any changes to the Serious Fraud Office's cash and running costs limits for 1991-92.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class X vote 7 will be increased by £110,000 from £8,862,000 to £8,972,000. Within this total the Department's running costs limit will be increased by £110,000 from £8,132,000 to £8,242,000.

This increase will enable the Serious Fraud Office to meet additional administrative costs associated with the investigation into the Maxwell group of companies and for further inquiries into the affairs of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General whether he proposes any changes to the Crown Prosecution Service's cash and running costs limits for 1991-92.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class X, vote 5 will be increased by £300,000 from £157,433,000 to £157,733,000. Within this total the Department's running cost limit will be increased by £3,350,000 from £149,390,000 to £152,740,000.

Additional provision is required to enable the Crown Prosecution Service to meet the cost of implementation of the War Crimes Act 1991 and the costs of employing additional legal staff. Most of the increase in running costs expenditure has been offset by savings on capital expenditure.

The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes are proposed to the class X, vote 12 running costs limit for the Public Record Office.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary token supplementary estimate, the running costs limit for class X, vote 12 will be increased by £201,000 from £19,292,000 to £19,493,000. This increase covers costs associated with agency launch and certain payments to Property Holdings, and will be contained within the overall cash limit as a result of increased appropriations in aid.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Information Systems

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will name the parties to whom his Department has sent, and with whom his Department has consulted on, the OECD produced guidelines for the security of information systems, explanatory memorandum, and recommendation of the council: draft documents (reference No. DSTI/ICCP/AH(90)21/Rev3).

Mr. Leigh: During preparatory work on draft OECD guidelines for the security of information systems and associated documents, which continue to be in draft, the Department of Trade and Industry has consulted all United Kingdom Government Departments having an interest. The Department has also consulted its Information Technology Security Advisory Group, comprising a range of IT security specialists from the private sector and academia.

The OECD is also advised direct on the draft guidelines through information system security experts on its Business and Industry Advisory Committee, which includes a number of representatives from the United Kingdom.

Cash Limits

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limit and running costs limit for 1991-92.

Mr. Lilley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 2 (support for industry, international trade, statutory and regulatory work, consumer protection, and administration) will be reduced by £5,000,000 from £763,019,000 to £758,019,000. The running costs limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be reduced by £2,238,000 from £258,236,000 to £255,998,000.

The supplementary estimate covers a rise of £9,245,000 in gross provision for the consultancy initiatives, reflecting higher than expected demand for the scheme, and a rise of £1,587,000 in gross provision for consumer and investor protection, reflecting increased expenditure on companies investigations. These increases are wholly offset by reductions in gross provision and increases in appropriations in aid elsewhere on the vote, including an increase of £2,147,000 in receipts appropriated in aid of the consultancy initiatives.

There is an increase of £4,346,000 in departmental capital expenditure and research establishments' major building works and capital expenditure as a result of the end-year flexibility arrangements for capital announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1991, Official Report, columns 183-88.

There are reductions of £2,828,000 in voted provision for long term loans to the Patent Office Executive Agency trading fund and of £2,000,000 for long term loans to Companies House Executive Agency trading fund, reflecting a lower requirement for such loans than originally forecast. There are also reductions in net provision of £520,000 for the Patent Office and £561,000 for Companies House in respect of the period before they became trading funds, 1 April to 30 September 1991.

There are transfers within provision for Radiocommunications, Warren Spring Laboratory and the National Physical Laboratory executive agencies. These transfers have no effect on the net total for each agency.

There are also a number of other minor changes to the vote, as shown in the supplementary estimate, to reflect the latest forecasts of expenditure and receipts.

The reduction in the running cost limit mostly reflects the transfer of funds for routine maintenance and rent to capital.

As supplementary estimates cannot reduce total voted provision, the supplementary estimate gives effect to these changes through an increase of a net token £1,000 in class IV, vote 2. The accompanying cash limit reduction of £5,000,000 for trading funds and greater Insolvency Service receipts than shown in the supplementary estimate itself.

DEFENCE

"Options for Change"

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish details of defence expenditure changes under "Options for Change" already implemented and those envisaged for the next 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of trends in Defence spending between 1990-91 and 1994-95 are published today in "The Government's Expenditure Plans for the Ministry of Defence" (Cmd 1901)—which will be placed in the Library of the House. These figures take full account of plans developed as a result of earlier work on "Options for Change".

Gulf War

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has received that ammunition supplied by United Kingdom companies under the Jordan defence packages was used by Iraqi forces during military operations in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Cash Limits

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes any changes to the defence cash limits for 1991-92.

Mr. Tom King: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary spring supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

Defence cash limits

£'000s

Class and vote	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit
I, 1	10,460,332	+130,116	10,590,448
I, 2	9,549,823	+329,257	9,879,080
I, 3	1,620,347	−4,958	1,615,389
I, 4	1,888,094	−80,737	1,807,357
I, 5	513,918	+18,371	532,289

These changes increase the block defence cash limit by £392,049,000 from £24,032,514,000 to £24,424,563,000. They are principally to cover increased expenditure arising from the United Kingdom military commitment in the Gulf. The total increase this year is thus about £1·5 billion which is in line with the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 18 April 1991, Official Report, at column 558.

The changes also take account of a transfer of provision from class I, votes 3, 4 and 5 to cover forecasts of increased expenditure on class I, vote 1 and a decrease of £71,211,000 to compensate for an overspend on class I, votes 1, 4 and 5 in financial year 1990-91. This follows the normal practice of reducing the limit for one year by the amount of any overspend in the previous year.

The increase in defence provision for 1991-92 will be charged to the reserve and it will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure. The increase will be largely offset by the generous cash contributions from other Governments received this financial year in respect of the United Kingdom military commitment in the Gulf.

Security Guards (Faslane and Coulport)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring his Department carries out of the hours worked by and hourly rates payable to private security guards at Faslane and Coulport.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence does not employ civilian security guards at the Clyde submarine base. Civilian security firms, hired by the Property Services Agency and its contractors, are used at construction sites at Faslane and Coulport. The terms and conditions of these personnel are a matter for their employers.

Company Contracts

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on letting further contracts to companies which have been convicted of breaches of health and safety legislation committed in the course of fulfilling earlier contracts with his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A breach of health and safety legislation would not preclude a company from receiving contracts from the Ministry of Defence, provided remedial action was proposed, or had been undertaken, to the satisfaction of the appropriate enforcement authority and having regard to operational and other considerations.

Health and safety legislation is a matter for the Secretary of State for Employment.

Soviet Nuclear Weapons

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Ministry of Defence officials will be sent on the technical mission to Moscow to assess the immediate needs on handling surplus Soviet nuclear weapons and safeguarding nuclear materials.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Detailed planning for co-operation has not yet been completed. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will report to the House as soon as possible.

Soviet Union (Members' Visits)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the date of each briefing afforded to hon. Members by his Department in advance of visits to the former Soviet Union since May 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not available, as the Department has no need to maintain such records.

Polaris Submarines

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the requirement for a fifth Polaris submarine.

Mr. Alan Clark: No assessment of the possible requirement for a fifth Polaris submarine has been made since the early 1970s.

Russian Armed Forces

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence personnel will be sent to the Russian Ministry of Defence to discuss the control and financing of armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government have offered to send a small number of officials from the Ministry of Defence to the Russian Ministry of Defence to advise on the restructuring and control and financing of armed forces in a democratic society.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Customs Officers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in which ports and airports the main reductions in manning levels of customs preventative officers will take place;

(2) how many customs preventative officers will be in post on the 31 March 1993.

(3) what consideration he gave to the effective control of drug trafficking in approving the recent reductions by the Board of Customs and Excise of the number of front-line customs officers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In determining Customs anti-smuggling resources required for 1992-93 the aim has been to provide a service which is better equipped and targeted at areas of highest risk. A further consideration is the more flexible approach being adopted in the way in which the controls are organised; this involves a move away from the static controls previously used.

This approach has been adopted nationally as a result of the review of anti-smuggling controls completed by the Department in 1989. The changes in no way reduce the effectiveness of controls against drug trafficking. Customs are also taking steps to ensure provision of more timely and adequate intelligence in discussion with trade organisations and with other Customs and other law enforcement services.

Changes at particular ports and airports depend upon the extent to which local heads of executive units will be able to make use of flexible anti-smuggling teams and the risk category of the traffic in particular locations. Details by port and airport are not yet available.

The total number of anti-smuggling staff employed at the frontier at 31 March 1993 is expected to be just under 3,500. These staff will be supplemented by further resources on associated duties.

Small Businesses

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the extent of compliance by branch offices of the clearing banks with the codes of business practice concerning small businesses agreed by their head offices.

Mr. Maples: Officials are currently reviewing the codes and how they are being implemented. All the codes establish complaint procedures for customers who feel they have been treated badly, and so, in the first instance, it is for the customers to judge compliance with the codes and to use the banks' published complaints procedure, where necessary.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the outturn for 1991 and the forecast for 1992 of the United Kingdom's total gross and net contributions to the European Community budget, in current and constant 1990 prices.

Mr. Maude: A final outturn figure for 1991 and a precise current price forecast for 1992 of the United Kingdom's gross and net contributions to the European Community budget are not yet available. They will be published in the "Statement on the 1992 Community Budget" before the Easter recess.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of trade in manufactures with (a) the rest of the EC and (b) the rest of the world, for each year since 1987.

Mr. Mellor: Figures for the balance of trade in manufactures with the rest of the EC are published in tables II and V of the CSO's "Business Monitor: Overseas Trade Statistics of the UK." Figures for the balance of trade in manufactures with the rest of the world are published in table A9 of the CSO's "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and table 2.3 of the "Pink Book, the UK Balance of Payments". All three publications are available in the Library of the House.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the public sector borrowing requirement in 1992-93; and what percentage of gross domestic product he expects that to be.

Mr. Mellor: A forecast will be published in the 1992 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Gross Domestic Product Growth

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate for gross domestic product growth in 1992.

Mr. Maples: My right hon. Friend will publish a new forecast in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" on 10 March.

Drug Seizures

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the overall figure of seized illegal drugs detected by customs officers in each of the last 12 years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is as follows:

	Kilos
	Cannabis	Heroin	Cocaine	Amphetamine
1980	25,610	38	35
1981	24,188	87	13	8
1982	16,245	183	12	2
1983	20,692	212	73	13
1984	26,256	312	35	19
1985	20,905	334	78	26
1986	22,298	179	99	29
1987	16,292	190	362	15
1988	44,018	230	283	18
1989	50,715	331	424	22
1990	24,581	576	561	81
1991	22,500	356	1,061	[1]473

Notes:

1. Figures are for main types of drugs.
2. 1991 figures are provisional.

Cash Limits

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash and running cost limits for 1991-92 in respect of the Paymaster General's office.

Mr. Maples: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Paymaster General's Office (class XVIII, vote 12) will be increased by £90,000 from £21,358,000 to £21,448,000 and the running cost limit increased by £300,000 from £19,462,000 to £19,762,000. These increases reflect additional costs associated with the systems required to operate on a repayment basis, and to meet additional costs incurred in the ending of weekly pension books.

These increases will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is proposing any change to the Central Office of Information cash limit and running costs limit for 1991-92 and to the services provided on an allied basis by the Central Office of Information for 1991-92.

Mr. Maples: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 14 will be increased by £30,000 from £28,109,000 to £28,139,000 and the running costs limit by £22,000 from £1,145,000 to £1,167,000. This is accounted for by higher than anticipated expenditure on services to Parliament (£12,000) and the royal household (£18,000). The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he proposes to make to the cash and running cost limits for 1991-92 for the National Investment and Loans Office.

Mr. Maples: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 11 will be increased by £449,000 from £1,000 to £450,000. The additional provision is required to cover a shortfall in fees payable on loans to local authorities. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The running costs limit will be reduced by £20,000 from £1,297,000 £1,277,000.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there will be any changes to the Treasury's running costs limits in 1991-92.

Mr. Maples: The Treasury's running costs limit for 1991-92 is being reduced by £1,213,000 from £86,603,000 to £85,390,000 in order to meet an increased requirement for capital expenditure and an increase in the grant in aid to the Inter-Parliamentary Union. These changes will be reflected in a token supplementary estimate which will be presented for parliamentary approval in due course.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the retail prices index following the abolition of the community charge and its replacement by the council tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I intend to reconvene the retail prices index advisory committee with the following terms of reference:

> "To advise the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the implication for the RPI of the abolition of the community charge and its replacement by the council tax; to review progress on implementing the committee's previous recommendation on the inclusion in the index of expenditure on holidays; and to review the present treatment in the index of new cars. In framing its recommendations the committee is asked to take account of the practices in other European Community countries."

VAT

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total number of VAT registrations and deregistrations by region for the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 4 February 1992]: The information is as follows:

Region	1987		1988		1989		1990		1991
	Registration	Deregistration	Registration	Deregistration	Registration	Deregistration	Registration	Deregistration	Registration	Deregistration

Northern Ireland	3,413	2,920	3,952	7,498	4,074	3,224	4,226	3,113	3,607	3,783

Notes:

1. Regions based on aggregation of local VAT office areas.
2. "New registrations" include both first and other registration, for example a sole proprietor taking on a partner or forming a limited company.
3. De-registrations occur for various reasons other than ceasing trading, for example due to a change of status or falling below the threshold.

The figures for 1991 reflect the substantial increase in the VAT threshold in the 1991 Budget.

WALES

Milford Haven

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what feasibility studies have been initiated by the Welsh Office into the development of Milford Haven into the major deep water port to serve the western arc seaboard of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: No representations have been received on this matter, but we are aware that Dyfed county council is looking at development opportunities in conjuction with other organisations bordering on the western arc seaboard. My Department, the Welsh Development Agency and other appropriate non-departmental public bodies will continue wherever possible to assist measures to develop Milford Haven's potential.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements for transfer of dowry funds with resettled mental handicap patients to local authorities have been made in each regional health authority; under what terms these payments are made; and if he will list by regional health authority the sums transferred each year on this basis.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy we have introduced arrangements which provide for the transfer of blocks of resources from district health authorities to local authorities as people with a mental handicap move into the community in accordance with agreed joint county plans. This was done by means of a circular to all DHAs and county councils last September. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House. The first formal transfers of resources under this system will be made early in the new financial year.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sales of capital assets have arisen from closures of mental handicap hospitals; and if he will list the assets disposed of and the money raised by each sale.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Since the all-Wales mental handicap strategy was launched in March 1983 two mental handicap hospitals in Wales, Drymma Hall—West Glamorgan health authority—and Allt-y-Mynydd—East Dyfed health authority—have closed. The proceeds of sale, £187,800 and £132,000 respectively, were returned to the authorities concerned and redeployed to improve services for people with mental handicap within the authorities concerned.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by staff grade and specialty, the number of full-time equivalent medical and nursing posts available to health service hospitals in 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on posts is not available centrally.

Readily available information on whole-time equivalent numbers of hospital medical staff by grade and specialty is shown in various editions of the publication "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales", copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. Figures for 1976 are shown in table 3.03, volume 4, 1977; for 1981 in table 3.06, volume 9, 1982; and for 1986 in table 3.06, volume 14, 1987. Information on hospital and community nursing and midwifery staff is also shown—table 3.08(b), volume 4, 1977; table 3.10, volume 9, 1982; and table 3.10, volume 14, 1987. There have been changes over time and figures for different years may not be comparable. Information for 1991 is not yet available.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies have been conducted, or are under way, into the administrative work loads of doctors, nurses and clinical staff in the professions associated with medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No studies that specifically address the administrative work loads of these staff groups have been undertaken in Wales.

However, such measurements are likely to be facilitated for the professions allied to medicine staff group as a result of a current study—"Workload Measurement Tools"—which the Welsh Health Common Services Authority is undertaking at unit level.

District Nurses

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by health authority the number of full-time equivalent district nursing posts and the number of potential elderly domiciliary clients, as defined by the Department of the Environment under section 80 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, for 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on posts is not available centrally; complete information on the number of staff in post is only available for all nursing and midwifery staff, and not for district nurses.

Section 80 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 requires the Secretary of State to report how revenue support grant is distributed between Welsh local authorities. The formulae in Wales do not explicitly refer to "potential elderly domiciliary clients"—the needs of these people being subsumed in a more general allocation procedure.

Open-heart Operations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 76, what was the number of open-heart operations carried out at the University hospital of Wales, the Heath, Cardiff, in each year since 1982 inclusive.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information in the form requested is not available. However, information provided by the centrally-funded regional cardiac centre at University hospital of Wales from 1984-85 shows that the following operations were undertaken:

Adult	By-pass	Others
1984-85	528	30
1985-86	573	26
1986-87	500	48
1987-88	566	—
1988-89	522	90
1989-90	561	77
1990-91	577	65
[1]1991-92	549	60
Paediatric
[1]1991-92	27	15

I have recently announced additional contract funding of more than £5 million to expand facilities at UHW to enable it to perform 800 adult open-heart operations per annum and £2·5 million over the next three years to complete the development of the paediatric cardiac unit and equip it to undertake 200 operations each year for children of all ages.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 76, if he will give the average length of the waiting list for open-heart surgery in the catchment area of the University hospital of Wales, the Heath, Cardiff, for each year since 1982 inclusive and for the whole of Wales, on the same basis.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The only information held centrally relates to waiting lists for cardiac surgery. This is published in "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin 1991: No. 2" a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Recycling

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the measures undertaken by his Department to achieve the target set for the proportion of household waste to be recycled by 2000; and what is the estimated impact of each measure.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department is involved in a number of measures jointly with the Department of the Environment as part of national programmes; and I refer the hon. Gentleman to the document "This Common Inheritance—The First Year Report" published in September 1991. The combined effect of these measures is designed to minimise waste and encourage recycling. From the information in the reports to be published under the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 we will be able to assess the extent of any further action that we will need to take.

Singleton Hospital, Swansea

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what final date he has to announce his decision on the recommendation of 28 January by West Glamorgan relating to the future of the night casualty service at Singleton hospital, Swansea.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There is no prescribed time limit for considering issues such as this. The one-month period for representations to be made to my right hon. Friend on these proposals will end on 28 February. A decision will be made when all representations received have been fully considered.

Soft Landscaping

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue a planning policy guidance note along the lines proposed by the Horticultural Traders Association dealing with soft landscaping in association with development proposals.

Mr. David Hunt: I have not seen a copy of the Horticultural Traders Association's proposals, but I join my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in commending the HTA for reminding local planning authorities of the importance of appropriate landscaping for development proposals.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the initiatives taken by his Department to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and indicate the estimated reduction for each initiative by (a) 2000 and (b) 2005.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 6 February.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limits for his Department in the current financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 4 will be reduced by £12,644,000 from £156,567,000 to £143,923,000; the cash limit for class XVI, vote 5 will be increased by £641,000 from £393,285,000 to £393,926,000; the cash limit for class XVI, vote 8 will be reduced by £20,912,000 from £1,143,460,000 to £1,122,548,000; the cash limit for class XVI, vote 9 will be increased by £304,000 from £55,406,000 to £55,710,000; the cash limit for class XVI, vote 10 will be reduced by £6,254,000 from £1,775,320,000 to £1,769,066,000. In addition the local authority capital cash limit—WO/LACAP—will be increased by £22,700,000 from £374,662,000 to £397,362,000.

The reduction in the cash limit for vote 4 reflects a lower take-up on employment training than expected. The Welsh Office contribution to the Department of Employment in respect of training activities will be reduced accordingly.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 5 reflects (i) a transfer of provision—£501,000—from class XVI, vote 10 to cover the costs of Bishop Vaughan school which has opted for grant maintained status; (ii) additional provision for the National Biological Standards Board—£63,000; and (iii) provision to cover a grant towards the capital expenditure on the former Cwmbran development corporation's approved roads programme—£77,000.

The net reduction in the cash limit for vote 8 is in respect of: (i) A non-recurrent reduction of £22,000,000 which is required because of technical changes to the present arrangements for the payment of income tax, national insurance and superannuation contributions by health authorities and family health service authorities. This change will mean that contributions for March 1992 will not be drawn from resources in this financial year. There will be no effect upon health service provision in 1991-92 or subsequent years. (ii) An additional sum of £1,200,000 to cover the cost of expenditure incurred by some health authorities in Wales in preparing to treat Gulf war casualties. (iii) A transfer of £38,000 from the Department of Health to provide additional resources for occupational therapy training. (iv) A transfer of £150,000 to class XVI, vote 7 to meet additional costs incurred in non-cash limited pharmaceutical services.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 9 is in respect of the take-up of end year flexibility entitlement from 1990-91 for running costs expenditure—£186,000—and capital administration costs—£118,000—as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1991, Official Report, columns 185-190.

The reduction in the cash limit for vote 10 comprises (i) the transfer of provision to class XVI, vote 5 in respect of the Bishop Vaughan school—£501,000; and (ii) a reduction in the provision for the costs of council tax banding—£3,253,000—and for prior-year adjustments in local authorities' entitlement to rate support grant—£2,500,000.

The net increase of £22,700,000 in the local authority capital cash limit—WO/LACAP—represents additional provision for home renovation grants.

Hospital Referrals

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will order an investigation into the number of patients in each health authority in Wales who are awaiting referral to a hospital (a) outside the authority's control and (b) outside the authority's contractual arrangements.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 31 January 1992]: District health authorities in Wales have assured me that they are not aware of any patients awaiting referral to hospitals in either of these circumstances.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Astronomy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of funding for astronomy in the next three years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that the Science and Engineering Research Council plans the following provision for the funding of astronomy and planetary science:

1992-3 £ million	1993-4 £ million	1994-5 £ million
83·6	90·1	94·5

Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what order, made under section 134 of the Education Reform Act 1988, he made the conditions on the funding by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council which he notified to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council on 19 February 1991 and to the Committee of Directors of Polytechnics on 2 September 1991.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under section 134(6) of the Education Reform Act 1988, the Secretary of State may make grants to the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding council of such amounts and subject to such conditions as he may determine. Section 134(7) provides that such conditions shall not relate to making of grants or other payments by the council to any specified institution. Neither of those subsections provides for the making of an order and none was made. Section 134(8) and (9) gives power to the Secretary of state to give directions to the funding council by order but that power was not exercised.

Polytechnics and Colleges

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of students enrolled on full-time and part-time studies in polytechnics and colleges (a) in 1979-80, or at incorporation if later and (b) currently.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The numbers of students enrolled on full-time courses and part-time courses at polytechnics and colleges in Great Britain in 1979-80 were 217,400 and 168,100 respectively. The comparable figures for 1990-91 were 374,800 and 262,600.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in respect to the student loan scheme (a) the most recent figures for loan applications received, (b) the number of loans made, (c) the value of loans made and (d) the total costs, including VAT, incurred administering the scheme.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As at 4 February 1992, Student Loans Company Limited had received 149,576 applications for loans for the academic year 1991-92 and had paid 125,811 loans worth £65·784 million. The company spent £5·41 million on operating the loans scheme between 1 September 1991 and 31 January 1992. This included net VAT costs of £0·94 million.

Higher Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the figures for the number or percentage of qualified leavers and young entrants into higher education, qualified participation indices, for 1979-80 and 1991-92.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The figures requested are as follows:

Great Britain	1979-80 actual	1991-92 projection
Qualified leaver index	14·7	23·2
Age participation index	12·4	22·5
Qualified participation index	84·0	97·1

The figures for 1991-92 are taken from the Department's latest projection as at April 1991.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will show the amount of the student maintenance grant in 1978-79 and 1991-92 in constant 1978-79 pounds.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The maximum basic maintenance grant for students in London as defined in the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations was £1,315 for the 1978-79 academic year. The comparable rate for 1991-92 is £2,845 which, together with the maximum full year student loan for London—£660—brings the available resources per student to £3,505, or £1,323 at constant 1978-79 prices. These comparisons take no account of changes in the composition of the mandatory award.

Student Numbers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current number of home students studying (a) full-time at universities, polytechnics and colleges and (b) part-time at universities, polytechnics and colleges and at the Open university.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The numbers of home students studying full time in universities, polytechnics and colleges in Great Britain in 1990-91 were 296,200, and 353,500 respectively. The comparable figures for part-time students were 45,200 and 270,000 respectively, with a further 95,000 students enrolled at the Open university.

Student Drop-outs

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the percentage drop-out rate of British home students before achieving diplomas and degrees in full-time and part-time education in the United Kingdom in 1979-80 and 1990-91.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Data for universities are not available in this form. However, table 10 of "University Management Statistics and Performance Indicators in the UK", 1990 edition, indicates the proportions of full-time and sandwich students ending their studies unsuccessfully. This is shown for each university cost-centre, but no overall figure is computed. A copy is in the Library.

For polytechnics and colleges in England, some 16 per cent. of full-time and sandwich first-degree students commencing courses in 1987 did not return to the second year of the course.

St. Fidelis School, Erith

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce a decision on the proposed expansion and extension of St. Fidelis primary school in Erith; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The section 13 proposals published by the governors of St. Fidelis RC primary school are currently being considered. My right hon. and learned Friend will announce his decision shortly.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the total number of pupils attending grant-maintained secondary schools on the latest available figures.

Mr. Eggar: There are some 103,000 pupils attending secondary schools that are now operating as grant-maintained, based on January 1991 pupil returns.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes any changes to cash limits on votes within his responsibility for 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limits for class XI, vote 2, higher and further education, vote 4, administration and vote 5, science, will be amended. The cash limit changes are as follows:

Class and Vote	Current cash limit £	Change £	Revised cash limit £
XI.2	2,916,803,000	+12,188,000	2,928,991,000
XI.4	106,617,000	−1,984,000	104,633,000
XI.5	927,455,000	+4,484,000	931,939,000

The increase on class XI, vote 2 includes the full take-up of £2,688,000 capital end-year flexibility entitlement announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1991, at columns 186-89. It also includes £2,500,000 additional grant-in-aid to the Universities Funding Council as a contribution towards the increased cost to universities of employing clinical academic staff following the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body pay settlement; and provision of £7,000,000 to enable the Open university to purchase the freehold of its site at Walton hall, Milton Keynes. These increases will be met from the Reserve.

The cash limit reduction of £1,984,000 on class XI, vote 4 offsets part of the increase to the cash limit on the science budget, class XI, vote 5.

Of the increase of £4,484,000 in class XI, vote 5, £1,000,000 is to enable the Medical Research Council to meet part of the cost of the clinical research initiative; £1,500,000 is to enable the Science and Engineering Research Council—SERC—to meet the costs of providing buildings to support the work undertaken by holders of SERC grants in higher education institutions; and the remaining £1,984,000 is to enable the Agricultural and Food Research Council to transfer to Unilever plc provision in respect of pensions of staff who were formerly employed by the Plant Breeding Institute. These increases are wholly offset by proceeds from the sale of capital assets which were surrendered to the Consolidated Fund in 1990-91 and by the cash limit reduction on class XI, vote 4. The current cash limit of £927,445,000 on class XI, vote 5 includes an increase of £7,000,000 which I announced in the House on 12 June 1991, at column 356, but which is also subject to parliamentary approval of the spring supplementary estimate.

University of Wales (Irish Students)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students from the Republic of Ireland are presently receiving their higher education at each of the colleges of the University of Wales; and what is the estimated contribution of his Department towards their tuition fees.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In academic year 1990-91 there were 177 students from the Irish Republic attending higher education courses at the university of Wales. Information as to numbers attending the university's constituent colleges is not collected centrally. In 1990-91 an estimated £220,000 was paid in fees-only mandatory awards to Irish undergraduate students attending the university of Wales.

THE ARTS

Cash Limits

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proposals he has for changes to the cash and running costs limits for his Department's votes in 1991-92.

Mr. Renton: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary spring supplementary estimates, the cash limits of the following votes will be changed as indicated:

Class and Vote	Current cash limit £	Change £	Revised cash limit £
XII.1	201,484,000	+339,000	201,823,000
XII.2	225,222,000	+4,070,000	229,292,000
XII.3	131,948,000	+1,000	131,949,000

Increased provision of £339,000 is being sought in a spring supplementary estimate on class XII, vote 1, to meet the additional costs to certain national museums and galleries of the payment of contributions in lieu of national non-domestic rates. The additional costs of £640,000 are being partly offset by savings of £301,000 elsewhere on the vote.

Provision is being sought on vote 2 for £500,000 to meet the initial costs of Government support for the European arts festival, 1992; and for £3,570,000 to augment the main estimate provision for assets accepted in lieu of tax. A token supplementary estimate of £1,000 will be presented in respect of vote 3 to secure parliamentary authority to the appropriation in aid in favour of the British library of part of the receipts form the sale of the library's premises at Store street.

The additional provision sought, £4,410,000, will be charged to the reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

CIVIL SERVICE

Cash Limits

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what proposals he has for changes to the 1991-92 cash limit for the office of the Minister for the Civil Service.

Mr. Renton: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XIX, vote 1) will be increased by £217,000 from £41,721,000 to £41,938,000. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The increase is required to cover the cost of physical security improvements, refurbishment work in 10 Downing street and the cost of additional staff on outward secondment (this latter charge is offset by increased appropriations in aid). In addition appropriations in aid have been amended to take account of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency becoming ineligible to claim VAT refunds on contracted out services. The Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency's capital provision has been reduced to reflect a reassessment of its capital equipment requirements.

Some of the changes in provision have a consequent effect on the Department's running costs limit which will be increased by £141,000 from £49,052,000 to £49,193,000.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Credits

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on how the youth training guarantee applies to young people in the areas covered by training credits.

Mr. Jackson: Training credits operate within the YT framework and the YT guarantee continues to apply.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of each review of the systems of training credits which have been piloted during the last year.

Mr. Jackson: We hope to issue a report in the spring on the results of the evaluation of the training credits pilot schemes during their first nine months of operation. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of each of the proposals to extend the system of training credits.

Mr. Jackson: No. The information contained in the proposals is commercial in confidence.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evalution of training credits was conducted by his Department before 26 November 1991.

Mr. Jackson: At 26 November 1991, an interim study of the pilots had been completed by the training standards inspectorate in conjunction with the careers service inspectorate. External research in each pilot area had also been commissioned. We hope to publish evaluation results from the first nine months of operating training credits in the spring.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if it remains his policy that the terms and arrangements outlined in the White Paper, "Competing for Quality", should apply in respect of his Department's negotiations with the training and enterprise councils and the TECs' negotiations with local providers of training.

Mr. Jackson: The Department negotiates a performance based contract with TECs with quality and value for money very much in mind. Stretching but fair targets are set. Negotiations between TECs and their providers is a matter for the two parties concerned.

Earnings

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will show for full-time workers the percentage earning less than £180 and £190 giving the information for (a) women and (b) men, (1) manual, (2) non-manual and (3) all workers, including overtime pay and excluding overtime pay for (i) Scotland, (ii) the regions of Scotland and (iii) Great Britain;

(2) if he will show for full-time workers the percentage earning less than £130 and £140 per week giving the information for (a) women and (b) men, (1) manual, (2) non-manual and (3) all workers, including overtime pay and excluding overtime pay for (i) Scotland, (ii) the regions of Scotland and (iii) Great Britain.

Mr. Forth: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey is given in the tables.

Employment Protection

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of contributions he has made under section 123 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978; and if he will state the extent to which in each case any deficit in funds was made good by his Department for each year since 1978.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available in the form requested. Total payments to occupational pension schemes under section 123 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 for each financial year to 1989-90, the latest available date, were as follows:

Year	Expenditure (£000)
1978-79	87
1979-80	247
1980-81	582
1981-82	386

1985-86	289

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

13. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet the president of the National Farmers Union to discuss the GATT negotiations.

Mr. Gummer: I am in regular contact with the president of the NFU to discuss all matters concerning agriculture, including the GATT round.

Fish Laboratories

14. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a progress report on the new building programme for the MAFF fish laboratories in Weymouth.

Mr. Curry: Planning approval has been granted for the new fish diseases laboratory at Weymouth and consultants have produced the final sketch plan. Demolition of the existing buildings is expected to start in June this year and the new laboratory should be completed by the end of 1993.

Hill Farming

15. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the National Farmers Union about hill farming and the hill livestock compensatory allowance.

Mr. Gummer: My noble Friend the Minister of State met the National Farmers' Union on 23 October as part of the normal consultation procedures we have held with the NFU. I will report to the House about the operation of the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme 1992 as soon as the review has been completed.

Potatoes

16. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Potato Marketing Board to encourage more variety in species of potato grown in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: None. The Potato Marketing Board's latest planting survey showed that 131 varieties were grown commercially in Great Britain last year.

Food Safety

17. Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the implementation of the Food Safety Act 1990 with reference to the selling of out-of-date food in the retail trade.

Mr. Maclean: No Sir. It is already an offence under the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 for anyone to sell food bearing an expired "use by" date.

It is also an offence under the Food Safety Act 1990 to sell any food which is unfit for human consumption or which is not of the nature, substance or quality demanded by the purchaser, whether or not any date mark has expired.

Cetaceans

18. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new initiative he has to protect cetaceans.

Mr. Gummer: We remain very concerned to take measures to secure the conservation of cetaceans. Most recently, on 1 January 1992, we introduced a scheme for voluntary reporting by United Kingdom fishermen of all incidental catches of marine mammals, including cetaceans. The EC-wide limitation on drift net length we secured last October will also contribute to conservation of cetaceans.

River Pollution

19. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any further plans to combat the pollution of rivers by the agricultural industry.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 21 January that a pilot study would be drawn up to see if pollution could be reduced by the preparation and use by farmers of plans for the disposal of manure, slurry and other organic wastes. This will supplement existing measures to tackle river pollution from agriculture including new legislation setting minimum constructional standards for farm waste storage facilities, 50 per cent grant aid towards the cost of such facilities, an increased maximum fine available to magistrates for water pollution offences, free initial pollution advice by ADAS and a £2 million R and D programme.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his review of the environmentally sensitive area boundaries will be completed.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Boscawen), earlier today.

Job Losses

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many jobs have been lost in the farming industry since 1979.

Mr. Curry: The number of farmers and workers recorded in the June census of agricultural holdings were 740,000 in 1979 and 628,000 in 1991. The difference of 112,000 overestimates the number of jobs lost because of changes in the basis on which the data were collected.

Beef Producers

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new measures he is taking to improve returns to specialist beef producers.

Mr. Curry: In October, Ministers announced that some £74 million would be made available to specialist beef producers in 1991-92 through the suckler cow premium scheme. The hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme continues to provide assistance to producers of beef cattle in the less favoured areas. Beef producers could also be eligible for assistance under the new group marketing grant scheme which is currently being finalised and will be introduced in April.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in discussions on the reform of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs Gorman).

Agricultural Land (Planning Applications)

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he takes to monitor local authority planning consent with regard to alternative uses for agricultural land.

Mr. Curry: This Department does not monitor planning consents. The Department of the Environment collects statistics from local planning authorities but these do not extend to identifying changes of use for agricultural land.

Animal Exports

26. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animals were exported live in the past 12 months; what was their estimated value; and if he will make a statement on the conditions under which they were exported.

Mr. Maclean: All animals exported from Great Britain for slaughter or further fattening must undergo pre-export rest and veterinary inspection at Government-approved lairages, before being loaded on to vehicles approved for the purpose.

A total of 1,186,702 animals were inspected and declared fit for transport during 1991.

Figures showing the value of these exports are not yet available.

25. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the implications of the MacSharry common agricultural policy reform proposals for the sheep industry.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which I gave to my hon. friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West on 19 December 1991, Official Report, column 306.

27. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he is next due to meet the president of the National Farmers Union to discuss the sheep sector.

Mr. Gummer: I will be meeting the president of the National Farmers Union on 18 February to discuss the sheep sector and other matters.

Mackerel

28. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the fishing industry about the future of the south-west mackerel box; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: On 28 November 1991 a regulation making the box permanent in the interests of conserving the western mackerel stock was adopted. The industry has frequently made clear to us that the south western mackerel box should be retained although some would like to see stricter controls on some fishing with small mesh nets within the box for species such as pilchards and horse mackerel whilst others seek some relaxation to permit a small quota of mackerel for local trawlers. There is at present no evidence to suggest the problem is sufficiently large to require a complete ban on small mesh nets. A small mackerel quota would need EC agreement even if we thought a case might be made.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received in the last 12 months regarding animal welfare; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Department has continued to receive a very large number of representatives on animal welfare. The Government attach great importance to this issue and will continue to press for the high standards in this country to be adopted throughout the European Community.

Cash Limits

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to make any changes to his Department's cash limits for 1991-92.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. The cash limit for class III, vote 4 (other agricultural and food services, support for the fishing industry, arterial drainage, flood and coast protection) will be reduced by £6,745,000 from £273,789,000 to £267,044,000. Within this limit expenditure will be reduced by £2,345,000 on agricultural schemes and by £1,400,000 on sea fishery support. These reductions reflect a predicted decrease in demand under these schemes. Expenditure on emergency and strategic food services will be reduced by £3,000,000 reflecting a reduction in the size of the emergency food stockpile.

The non-voted cash limit MAFF/LACAP (supplementary credit approvals for flood defence and coast protection) will be decreased by £2,000,000 from £16,594,000 to £14,594,000 reflecting a predicted reduction in local authority expenditure on flood defence capital works.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring he is undertaking of the benefits from set-aside for (a) diverse plant species, (b) butterflies and other invertebrates, (c) short-eared owls, hen harriers and other predatory birds and (d) foxes and other wild mammals; and when he expects to complete a proper scientific evaluation of the effect of set-aside on wildlife.

Mr. Curry: The Department is currently undertaking work on the environmental impact of set-aside, including a study of the changes in the botanical composition of fallowed set-aside land. Final results are expected in 1994. The study will also provide some information about the likely implications for wildlife and will be supported by a separate study of rabbit numbers on set-aside land.

We are considering the scope for further research into the benefits to wildlife and a number of other organisations are carrying out relevant work in this area. However the complex range of factors affecting wildlife populations and the need to measure changes over time, mean that a full scientific evaluation cannot be completed in the immediate future.

Recession

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the effects of the current recession on the agricultural industry.

Mr. Maclean: The support arrangements under the common agricultural policy have to a considerable extent insulated the agriculture industry from the direct effects of recession. Farmers have however benefited from the fall in interest rates over the past year and interest payments by the farming industry are expected to have fallen by 14 per cent. in 1991.

Farming and Fishing Enterprises

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements his Department has to assess the effect of proposals for regulations on small farming and fishing enterprises prior to implementation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food participates fully in the Government's deregulation initiative to ensure that the regulatory burden on the agriculture and fishing industries is kept under constant review and minimised wherever possible.

This process includes consultation at an early stage with industry, on both United Kingdom and European Community regulatory proposals through the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's close working relationships with trade associations and other groups. A cost compliance assessment which evaluates the effect all legislative proposals will have on industry is also prepared prior to implementation.

Fish Conservation

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the recent agreement of EC fisheries Ministers for the conservation of fish stocks.

Mr. Curry: Further to my statement in the House on 20 December we have today issued a consultation paper to the industry seeking views on a range of proposals which could be taken unilaterally to improve conservation of the fish stocks of importance to us. The proposals include suggestion for action on a one-net rule, a United Kingdom minimum landing size for whiting, further action on square mesh panels and new measures on net geometry.

A copy of the consultation document is available in the Library of the House.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any pasteurisation plants have yet been granted approval to process eggs from salmonella infected flocks; and how many plants have applied to him for such approval.

Mr. Maclean: No applications have been received for the approval of plants to pasteurise eggs from salmonella infected flocks. Consequently no plants have been approved for this purpose.

Pollution, Fal Estuary

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether current levels of pollution are within current EC standards in the Fal estuary, Cornwall.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

The relevant EC standards are environmental quality objectives (EQOs) for mercury and cadmium. Compliance with EQOs is demonstrated by reference to annual averages. Although higher than normal concentrations of these substances have recently been recorded in parts of the Fal estuary it is not possible to say whether there has yet been a breach of the EQO.

HEALTH

Dried Fruit

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1991, Official Report, column 54, if he will list the scientific references which led the health education authority to conclude that dried fruits contain non-milk extrinsic sugars.

Mr. Dorrell: During the process of drying, the cells of fresh fruit lose integrity and undergo structural changes, thus converting their intrinsic sugars to an extrinsic form as defined by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy.

The scientific principles of these processes are well established and described in basic food technology text books.

Patients Charter

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his estimate of the total extra costs incurred in enforcing standards in the patients charter expressed separately;

(2) what extra money he intends to provide specifically for meeting target standards under the patients charter;

(3) what assessment he has made of the manpower implications of the patients charter for (a) the ambulance services arising from requirements for response times, (b) accident and emergency departments arising from waiting time limits for initial assessment requirements, (c) out-patient departments arising from waiting time requirements, (d) operating theatres arising from cancellations of operations requirements and (e) on staffing arising from the naming of health service personnel as responsible for individual patients.

Mr. Dorrell: The patients charter defines acceptable standards for existing services. Each standard is currently being met, within existing resources, by some health authorities. Enforcement of charter standards will help to generalise this good management practice throughout the National Health Service.

Medical Professions (Work Load)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been conducted, or are under way, into the administrative work loads of doctors, nurses and clinical staff in the professions associated with medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no studies either completed or under way that specifically address the question of administrative work loads of doctors, nurses or professions allied to medicine.

The studies listed on the general work load of general medical practitioners (GMPs) and nurses have helped inform the Department of the administrative functions carried out by these groups.

1. The "Unnecessary Bureaucracy Working Group" which made recommendations on streamlining the administrative work of GMPs.
2. A cyclical study, in conjunction with the BMA, on the workload of GMPs. The last study was completed in 1989-90 and the next is scheduled to start in 1993-94.
3. A recently completed study by York university into nursing care which suggests that a small amount of time spent by nurses on administrative work can be beneficial to the quality of nursing care.
4. A survey to be commissioned shortly by the Department will address, among other things, the effects of using administrative support in relation to nursing.

Medical and Nursing Posts

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by staff grade and specialty, the number of full-time equivalent medical and nursing posts available to health service hospitals in 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information for 1991 is not yet available and 1990 data are shown in the tables. Information for 1976, 1981 and 1986 can be found in the publication "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for England" copies of which are available in the Library.

Notes:

[1] In 1982 specialty of Rheumatology replaced Rheumatology and rehabilitation: Rehabilitation became a sub-specialty of General medicine.

[3] New specialty introduced in 1989.
[4] In 1984 specialty of Diseases of chest renamed Thoracic medicine.
[5] New specialty introduced in 1979. Prior to 1979 staff in this specialty would usually have been included under "other".
[6] New specialty introduced in 1990.
[7] New specialty introduced in 1990.
[8] New specialty introduced in 1983. Prior to 1983 staff in this specialty would usually have been included under "other".
[9] New specialty introduced in 1980. Prior to 1980 staff in this specialty were included under Paediatrics.
[10] In 1985 specialty of Ear nose and throat renamed Otolaryngology.
[11] New specialty introduced in 1989.
[12] New specialty introduced in 1989.
[13] New specialty introduced in 1989.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements for transfer of dowry funds with resettled mental handicap patients to local authorities have been made in each regional health authority; under what terms these payments are made; and if he will list by regional health authority the sums transferred each year on this basis.

Mr. Dorrell: Payments of dowries are made under section 28A of the National Health Service Act 1977. Guidance on such payments was given to regional health authorities in HC(83)6, HC(84)9 and HC(86)11, copies of which are available in the Library. Information on dowry payments in respect of patients resettled from mental handicap hospitals is not available in the form requested. Total health authority dowry payments to local authorities for people with learning disabilities were £6.647 million in 1988-89 and £12.283 million in 1989-90.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number, for each regional health authority, of in-patient residents in health service facilities for patients with a mental handicap for each year since 1981; and what proportion of the reduction in numbers is due to discharge and what proportion due to death, for each regional health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the number of patients with learning disabilities resident in national health service hospitals and units by regional health authority. It is not possible to calculate the proportions of the reduction due to discharge and deaths as the data on admissions and discharges collected centrally do not relate to individual patients.

Triazolam

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of adverse drug reaction reports, through the yellow card system for each year from 1978 to 1991 for Triazolam; and how many of these were categorised as serious.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been 402 reports, of which 173 were categorised as serious. The number of reports by year is as follows:

Year of report	Total reports	Serious reports
1978	0	0
1979	50	20
1980	51	24
1981	48	12

Computerised Equipment

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many computerised tomography scanners and magnetic resonance machines are at present available to the national health service that were bought from (a) national health service funds and (b) charitable appeals.

Mr. Dorrell: There are 250 computerised tomography scanners and 30 magnetic resonance machines in use on national health service sites in the United Kingdom. Available information suggests that private donations or appeals helped towards the funding of purchase in approximately half these cases.

Dementia and Arthritis

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why it was decided not to include dementia and arthritis as key areas for action in his "Health of the Nation" report; and whether he proposes to ask public health directors to report on the demand for services for dementia and arthritis sufferers in their assessments of health needs.

Mr. Dorrell: Dementia and arthritis were not discussed and proposed in "The Health of the Nation" as areas in which health targets might be set because despite their importance they did not meet the proposed criteria for selection set out in the Green Paper. Directors of public health are already required to assess the health needs of the local population to inform their local health authority's decisions about the provision of services, including those for people suffering from dementia and arthritis. Progress in meeting needs is included in public health directors' reports to their regional health authorities and to the Department.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIII, vote 6 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys) will be increased by £263,000 from £95,807,000 to £96,070,000. This reflects an increase in running costs provision of £263,000 in respect of the end year flexibility arrangements for running costs expenditure (the increase of public expenditure will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planning total). Increases of £250,000 in the National Health Service central register area to reduce the backlog of transactions arising from computerisation of the national health service central register earlier this year: and £66,000 for additional and continuing work on medical statistics, and an increase in capital provision of £20,000 for work on morbidity will be matched by an increase in appropriations in aid on the OPCS vote. These latter amounts will be met from within the existing resources of the Department of Health (class XIII, vote 3).

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits and running cost limit of his Department in 1991-92.

Mr. Waldegrave: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made.

The cash limits for class XIII vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health services (part) and related services, England) will be decreased by £21,861,000 (from £16,520,699,000 to £16,498,838,000). This decrease allows for transfers to class XIII, vote 4 of £12,480,000 reflecting an increase in the NHS trusts' aggregate external financing limit and £8,214,000 following reapportionment of drug budgets; to class XIII, vote 3 of £2,000,000 for publicity in respect of deaths in infancy; £96,000 for the inquiry into still births and £24,000 for computer audit equipment; and to class XVI, vote 8 of £38,000 for the Cardiff school of occupational therapy. These reductions are partly offset by transfers from class XIII, vote 3 of £640,000 for valuation office services, £152,000 for inspection by the Medicines Control Agency; £128,000 for training purposes and £71,000 for the national external quality assessment scheme.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 3 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be decreased by £1,716,000 (from £733,429,000 to £731,713,000). This reduction allows for transfers to class XIV, vote 4 of £819,000 for accommodation of the artificial eye service; to class XIII, vote 1 totalling £991,000 as mentioned above; to class XVIII, vote 1 of £65,000 for Chessington computer centre and to class XVI, vote 7 of £11,000 for inspections by the Medicines Control Agency. Savings totalling £2,000,000 are also made from departmental administration capital. These decreases are partly offset by transfers from class XIII, vote 1 of £2,120,000 as mentioned above; and from class XIV, vote 4 of £90,000 for the Departmental Records Office.

The provision for running costs on class XIII, vote 3 and the Department's running cost limit is decreased by £15,000 from £252,921,000 to £252,906,000.

North West Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that there has been proper management of the finance and payroll computer systems in the North West Thames regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: All national health service finance and payroll systems are subject to statutory external audit.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend the list of illnesses qualifying for free prescriptions to include (a) cancer sufferers taking Tamoxifen and (b) other illnesses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Exemption from prescription charges on medical grounds is linked to specified medical conditions, rather than to particular treatments. There are no plans to change this policy or to extend the list of medical conditions which currently attract free prescriptions.

Existing, wide-ranging exemption arrangements, underpinned by the separate scheme for remission on grounds of low income and the prescription prepayment certificate scheme, ensure that no one need forego any necessary medication on financial grounds. Less than one item in five dispensed in the national health service currently attracts a charge.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will issue a clear exposition on the levels of service which can be expected by recipients of personal social services;

(2) what is his policy with regard to the principle of equity of access to personal social services;

(3) what steps he takes to measure outcomes in the provision of personal social services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for local authorities to determine the appropriate level of services based on their judgment of local needs and priorities and on available resources, and to monitor implementation. Their published community care plans should make clear the level of services they expect to provide.

The Department is committed to funding longer term research to evaluate the new community care arrangements, including the assessment of outcomes for users and carers.

The standard spending assessment for personal social services represents the Government's view of the appropriate level of spending required to achieve a standard level of service, and thus ensures that the Government's contribution to local government is targeted on areas with greatest need.

Community Nurses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on charging for community health nurse services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National health service community health services are provided free of charge.

Cook-Chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation has been undertaken into the value for money of expenditure by district health authorities on cook-chill catering units.

Mr. Dorrell: It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to assess and evaluate proposals for the introduction of cook-chill catering locally. They are also expected to evaluate a unit's performance against agreed standards as an integral part of the process of assessing value for money within the national health service.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he is monitoring the local implementation of the Children Act 1989 and National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 against local authorities' own definitions of need or a national notional norm; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has been discussing with the local authority associations and voluntary child care organisations how best to monitor implementation of the Children Act in respect of services to children in need as defined by section 17(10) of the Children Act. This will form part of the Department's strategy for monitoring implementation of the Children Act overall. The implementation of "Caring for People" is being monitored by regional health authorities and the regional social services inspectorate on the basis of the progress review issues document issued in June 1991.

National Health Service Trusts (Purchasing)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what directions have been given to trusts with regard to central purchasing arrangements;

(2) what proposals he has to restructure central purchasing arrangements within the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: The National Health Service Supplies Authority was established as a special health authority on 1 October 1991 to provide a comprehensive national supplies service for all national health service units throughout England. Over the next few months it will take over the supplies services currently provided by regional and district health authorities and will operate through a central headquarters and six operating divisions. All national health service units including trusts, will be encouraged to negotiate a service contract with the appropriate division of the authority for the range of supplies services each will require, in expectation of securing best value for money. Trusts will be free to manage their own supplies service but would be expected to demonstrate continuing value for money if they choose to do so.

Elderly People (Nursing Care)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of the national health service in providing long-term nursing care of the elderly, and on the circumstances under which private nursing care or private, voluntary or local authority residential care should be used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The role of the national health service in providing long-term nursing care is clearly set out in the White Paper "Caring for People" (Cm. 849) at paragraphs 4.19-4.22. Health authorities may make use of private nursing homes or nursing services as they see fit in the light of local circumstances and priorities and available resources. Similarly, it is for local authorities to decide whether to provide accommodation in their own homes or to arrange residential care in the independent sector for those who are in need of residential care.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service patients over retirement age have been discharged directly into (a) private nursing homes, (b) voluntary nursing homes, (c) private care homes, (d) voluntary care homes and (e) local authority part III accommodation for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Health and Social Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that there is consistency between the statistical information available nationally for planning both health care and social care.

Mr. Dorrell: A wide range of information supports the Department's planning, including demographic and census statistics as well as data relating to the NHS and local authority social services. The need for consistency is well established as a key consideration in the design of national collection systems. Mechanisms exist to formulate consistent central information requirements in both health and social services.

Home Helps

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the prevalence of local authorities redefining their criteria for access to home help/home care services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. We understand that some local authorities have revised their criteria.

Care Budget

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account will be taken of geographical variations when the care element of the social security budget for private and voluntary residential nursing care is transferred to local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Decisions about the distribution of the transfer from the Department of Social Security to individual local authorities will be taken later this year following discussions with the local authority associations.

Westwood Hospital

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about the plans to build a 50-bed bungalow-type hospital in the grounds of Westwood hospital.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 January 1992]: There are no such plans. I understand that Bradford health authority is consulting Bradford community health council about its plans for the development of local services for people with learning disabilities.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what analysis he has received of local opinion on the proposal to close Westwood hospital in Bradford; if he will summarise the opinion; and if he will place copies of the analysis in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 January 1992]: We have received no analysis of local opinion regarding the closure of Westwood hospital.

Bradford health authority is currently consulting Bradford community health council about its plans for developing services for people with learning disabilities.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Bradford Health announced its proposal to close Westwood hospital in Bradford; over what period the local community was consulted about the proposal; what consideration he has given to the proposal; and when he intends to announce whether he approves the closure proposal.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 January 1992]: Bradford health authority conducted a full public consultation between August and November 1990 on their proposals for the development of services for people with learning disabilities including the future role of Westwood hospital. These proposals have not been referred to Ministers.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will undertake to visit Westwood hospital, Bradford, to meet the local community before reaching a decision on the future of the hospital.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 January 1992]: No such proposal has been referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for a decision.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what public consultation has been conducted in Bradford over the proposal to close Westwood hospital; and what representations he has received about the consultation process.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 January 1992]: Bradford health conducted a full public consultation between August and November 1990 on its proposals for the development of services for people with learning disabilities including the future role of Westwood hospital. They are now consulting Bradford community health council for the next phase of these plans. We have received a number of representations about Westwood hospital from the hon. Members for Bradford, West and for Bradford, South (Mr Cryer) and a number of local residents.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will describe the normal procedure applied to any proposal to close a hospital; and the circumstances in which he is required to approve a proposal to close a hospital; and whether this normal procedure has been applied to the proposal by Bradford Health to close Westwood hospital.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 January 1992]: The procedure for the closure of hospitals is contained in the Community Health Councils Regulations 1985 (as amended). The regulations provide for formal local consultation, including the appropriate community health council, (CHC) for any significant change in hospital and community health services. If local agreement cannot be achieved, the proposals must be referred to the regional health authority who may reject them or forward them for consideration by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. In the case of services for people with learning disabilities, Bradford health authority has confirmed that it will consult with the CHC and other interested parties on its proposals including final closure and disposal of the hospital.

SCOTLAND

Health Service Staff

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by staff grade and specialty, the number of full-time equivalent medical and nursing posts available to health service hospitals in 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested. Data on the number (whole time equivalent) of hospital doctors and nurses in post in 1976, 1981 and 1986 are, however, contained in the appropriate editions of "Scottish Health Statistics"[1], copies of which are available in the Library.

Provisional figures for September 1991 are shown in the tables.

1976: tables 9.5 and 9.10-9.14
1981: tables 9.10 and 9.12
1986: tables 9.8 and 9.12

Notes:

1. Consultants and associate specialists holding maximum part-time contracts are counted as 1.0 WTE (except in 1976 tables).
2. The standard working week for nurses changed from 40 to 37·5 hours in 1980.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sales of capital assets have arisen from closures of mental handicap hospitals; and if he will list the assets disposed of and the money raised by each sale.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested, for the period since the 1974 reorganisation of the health service, is given in the table:

Health board	Hospital	Assets disposed of	Date of disposal	Proceeds from disposals (£)
Argyll and Clyde	Caldwell Hospital, Uplawmoor	Hospital property	1989	180,000·00
	Broadfield Hospital, Port Glasgow	Hospital property	1988	459,845·00
Fife	Glenlomond Hospital, by Kinross	Glenlomond Hospital Farm	1985	83,442·12
		House at Glenlomond Farm	1986	9,400·00
		Glenlomond Hospital property	1988	325,555·00
Tayside	Murthly Hospital	Hospital property	1988	359,695·60
	Strathmartine Craigmill House	Craigmill House property	1990	66,551·09

Individual health boards are able to retain proceeds from the disposals they achieve—currently at the rate of 80 per cent. with the balance being allocated by the management executive to benefit the NHS capital programme.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the revenue expenditure of each health board on health service facilities for patients with a mental handicap for each year since 1981, in cash terms and at 1991 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies have been conducted, or are under way, into the administrative workloads of doctors, nurses and clinical staff in the professions associated with medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No studies which address the administrative workloads of these staff groups have been undertaken or are planned in Scotland.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail his reasons for not allowing those local authorities which have incurred losses as a result of the BCCI affair to treat the sums involved as capital projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The accounting treatment of its BCCI loss is a matter for each local authority concerned to agree with its auditors.

Farming Policy

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the Scottish TUC to discuss farming policy.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to meet the Scottish TUC.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limits for 1991-92 within his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Yes, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary estimates, I intend to make changes to nine cash limits:

(a) The cash limit for class XV, vote 2: agricultural services and fisheries, Scotland, will be increased by £963,000 from £98,288,000 to £99,251,000. The increase in provision is required to meet an unexpected shortfall in appropriations in aid from disposals of property, higher than estimated commitments at the Scottish Agricultural college, increased provision for pensions and higher than anticipated demand under a number of grant schemes. These extra requirements are partly offset by savings elsewhere in the vote due to reduced demand under other grant schemes. The increase will be offset by taking up £543,000 end-year flexibility on capital spending and the balance of £420,000 forms part of the £578,000 reduction in the cash limit of class XV, vote 20, Scottish Office administration from £140,408,000 to £139,830,000.

(b) The cash limit for class XV, vote 7, housing, Scotland, will be increased by £7,690,000 from £499,608,000 to £507,298,000. Of this increase £7,545,000, to Scottish Homes' grant in aid, will assist housing associations in the acquisition of local authority and new town development corporation housing stock. The remainder will meet the costs of further publicity on the rent-to-mortgage scheme and the provision of advice on housing matters.

(c) The cash limit on class XV, vote 13, law, order and miscellaneous health services, Scotland, will be increased by £4,455,000 from £213,464,000 to £217,919,000. This increase will be offset by a reduction in the SO/LA1 cash block. The increased provision is required to cover additional costs in the administration of legal aid by the Scottish Legal Aid Board and to meet the costs of the investigations into war crimes and the Lockerbie air disaster. The remaining additional provision will cover the costs arising from the Orkney judicial inquiry, for social work offender services and miscellaneous health services.

(d) The cash limit for class XV, vote 14, education, arts and libraries, Scotland, will be reduced by £1,000,000 from £222,963,000 to £221,963,000. This reduction, due to slippage in major capital projects, will partly offset increases in other votes.

(e) The cash limit for class XV, vote 17, Scottish Record Office, will be reduced by £225,000 from £3,772,000 to £3,547,000. This reduction is due to slippage in a major capital project and will partly offset increased provision in other votes.

(f) The cash limit for class XV, vote 18, General Register Office for Scotland, will be reduced by £1,200,000 from £13,812,000 to £12,612,000. The bulk of this reduction arises from savings made in the costs of running the 1991 census and will partly offset increased provision in other votes.

(g) The cash limit for class XV, vote 20, Scottish Office administration, will be reduced by £578,000 from £140,908,000 to £140,330,000. This reduction will offset increases in capital and running cost provision in other votes. The running cost limit for the Scottish Office is unchanged.

(h) The cash limit for class XV, vote 26, hospital, community health, family health (part) and other health services, Scotland, will be reduced by £3,239,000 from £2,355,487,000 to £2,352,248,000. This reduction partly offsets increases in other votes.

(i) In addition the cash block SO/LA1, which covers non-housing capital expenditure by local authorities, will be reduced by £8,700,000 from £551,650,000 to £542,950,000. This reduction will partly offset increases in other votes.

(j) The non-voted cash block SO/LA2, which covers net capital allocation to local authorities on new town capital expenditure will be reduced by £7,690,000 from £343,496,000 to £335,806,000. This will partly offset increases in other votes.

All the increases mentioned will be offset by savings or charged to the reserve and therefore will not increase the planned total of public expenditure.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in Scotland, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 5 February 1992]: The information requested is given in the tables. For clarity of presentation, the first table includes figures for regions and islands areas and the whole of Scotland. The population figures in Table B have been prepared by a method that involves a certain degree of approximation and therefore they must be treated with some caution.

Boarding Schools

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) for each local education authority and (b) by location, the current state-owned boarding schools and the pupil establishment for each school.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 29 January 1992]: There are no boarding schools, in the generally understood sense of the term, under education authority management in Scotland.

Training

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average payment made to training managers for individual trainees on (i) youth training and (ii) employment training by Glasgow development agency last year and for the most recent date available.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 3 February 1992]: Payments to training providers for individual trainees on youth training and employment training within Glasgow are a matter for Glasgow development agency.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the sum of the precepts of the spending authorities on the collecting authorities in Scotland in 1992-93, on the assumption that local authorities spend at their standard spending assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 4 February 1992]: The precept system does not apply in Scotland where each local authority sets its own community charge.

East Kilbride Development Corporation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those organisations and individuals who responded to the consultation process in the wind-up of East Kilbride development corporation.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 4 February 1992]: Responses were received from the following organisations:

East Kilbride Development Corporation
Strathclyde Regional Council
East Kilbride District Council
Glasgow District Council
Scottish Enterprise
Lanarkshire Development Agency
Scottish Homes
National and Local Government Officers Association
East Kilbride Business Centre

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Staffordshire Education

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what was the pupil-teacher ratio in Staffordshire (a) in all schools and (b) in secondary schools in each year since 1979;

(2) what was the pupil-teacher ratio in each shire county in England in the most recent year for which figures are available (a) in primary schools and (b) in secondary schools.

Mr. Eggar: The pupil-teacher ratios for the categories requested are shown in the following tables.

Pupil-teacher ratios in Staffordshire local education authority 1979 to 1991[1]

[1] The pupil-teacher ratios presented for individual types of school take account only of qualified teachers within schools, whereas the calculation of the overall PTRs take account of all teachers employed by LEAs and grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent per pupil in Staffordshire in each year since 1979 (a) in primary schools and (b) in secondary schools at 1992 prices.

Mr. Eggar: Spending per pupil in primary schools and in secondary schools in Staffordshire is shown in the table. The table shows actual spending from 1979-80 to 1989-90, the latest year for which the information is available, at 1991-92 prices.

Net institutional expenditure[1] per pupil at 1991-92 prices[2]

Year	Primary (£)	Secondary (£)
1979-80	1,000	1,400
1980-81	1,085	1,470
1981-82	1,145	1,510
1982-83	1,170	1,505
1983-84	1,215	1,565
1984-85	1,175	1,555
1985-86	1,175	1,625
1986-87	1,230	1,755
1987-88	[3]1,310	1,895
1988-89	[3]1,300	1,990
[4]1989-90	[3]1,340	2,080

[1] Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure.

[2] Figures for earlier years have been repriced to 1991-92 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator index.

[3] Spending on nursery and primary schools was not collected separately for years after 1986-87, so per pupil figures for these years cover both nursery and primary schools.

[4] The figures in the tables are derived from local education authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department of Education and Science.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils attended schools in Staffordshire in each year since 1979; and how many of these attended secondary schools and how many attended primary schools.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the number of full-time equivalent pupils, who attended maintained schools in Staffordshire local education authority, for each year since 1979 is given, by type of school, in the following table.

Full-time equivalents of pupils in maintained schools in Staffordshire local education authority
1979 to 1991

	Nursery	Primary	Secondary	Special	Total
1991	1,500	88,400	67,200	2,100	159,200
1990	1,400	87,000	67,400	2,000	157,800
1989	1,500	84,300	69,400	2,000	157,200
1988	1,400	80,800	75,000	2,100	159,300
1987	1,400	79,300	79,800	2,200	162,600
1986	1,400	79,100	83,800	2,200	166,500
1985	1,400	78,200	88,600	2,300	170,500
1984	1,400	80,300	91,600	2,400	175,700
1983	1,400	84,600	89,900	2,400	178,300
1982	1,400	89,300	90,500	2,400	183,600
1981	1,400	94,700	90,800	2,500	189,400
1980	1,400	100,100	88,600	2,500	192,600
1979	1,400	104,800	86,700	2,500	195,400

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent on school education in Staffordshire in each year since 1979 at constant prices.

Mr. Eggar: Net recurrent spending on nursery, primary and secondary school education in Staffordshire is shown in the table. The figures are shown at 1989-90 prices, the latest year for which actual spending information is available.

Year	Net recurrent expenditure (£ million)
1979-80	201·3
1980-81	211·1
1981-82	216·8
1982-83	212·8
1983-84	215·5
1984-85	209·5
1985-86	206·6
1986-87	214·0
1987-88	221·3
1988-89	221·2
1989-90	229·6

Notes:

1. Net recurrent expenditure on education includes total expenditure other than costs of financing capital expenditure, less income other than from specific grants.
2. Figures for earlier years have been repriced to 1989-90 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator index.
3. The figures in the tables are derived from local education authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment.

Ko Hsuan School, Chawleigh

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last received a report on the standards of education at the Ko Hsuan school in Chawleigh, North Devon.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's inspectors last visited the school in March 1990 in order to inspect, in particular, the boarding accommodation and the occupation and supervision of pupils after normal school hours. Before that, the school was visited in September 1988 when all aspects of its provision, including education, were inspected in order to advise the Department about final registration, which followed in April 1989.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC (Surplus Produce)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current levels of surplus produce in store within the EC in connection with the operational activities of the common agricultural policy; and if he will provide separate figures for each commodity and separate figures for each year since 1988.

Mr. Curry: Tables showing current levels of surplus produce in store within the EC have been deposited in the Library of the House at monthly intervals throughout the period in question.

Meat (Drug Residues)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions during 1990 and 1991 illegal drug residues were identified in meat or animals destined for human consumption at (a) slaughterhouses, (b) retail outlets, (c) farms and (d) other locations; and what number of such incidents resulted in successful prosecutions.

Mr. Maclean: The number of cases of illegal drug residues detected in Great Britain by the Ministry was as follows:

	1990	1991
On farm	1	4
At slaughterhouses	22	—
At retail outlets	n/a	n/a
Other locations	—	—

n/a = Not available.

In all positive cases identified at Great Britain slaughterhouses, follow up visits to the farms of origin are made by members of the state veterinary service. Whenever firm evidence is obtained, action is then pursued through the courts. One successful prosecution was taken in 1991 which resulted in a fine of £2,400 plus £5,234 costs.

Foodstuffs (Destruction)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the amount of each foodstuff and fruits which were destroyed in the United Kingdom and the EC respectively in connection with the operational activities of the common agricultural policy in the most recent annual period for which figures are available.

Mr. Curry: The relevant information in respect of the EC relates to the 1988-89 season and is as follows:

Product	Quantity (tonnes)
Clementines	2,376
Satsumas	—
Nectarines	8,671
Oranges	988
Mandarins	—
Apples	183,183
Table grapes	—
Pears	2,022
Lemons	—
Apricots	305
Peaches	32,663
Aubergines	123
Tomatoes	8,130
Cauliflowers	38,831

The most recent figures for the United Kingdom relate to the calendar year 1991 and are as follows:

Product	Quantity (tonnes)
Apples	2,725
Pears	73
Cauliflowers	4,699

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he took part in party-political activities in addition to official duties on his visit to Hong Kong in October 1991.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend does from time to time meet fellow Conservatives in the margins of public duties. He also often meets opposition leaders of all political persuasions both in the United Kingdom and abroad.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of radioactive discharge from Glaxochem of Ulverston, British Nuclear Fuels Drigg site, Albright and Wilson and British Nuclear Fuels Sellafield to the sea along the coast of Cumbria, separately, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is as listed:

Year	Albright and Wilson[1]	Glaxochem[2]	Drigg[3] Total Alpha	Drigg[3] Total Beta	Sellafield[4] Total Alpha	Sellafield[4] Total Beta

[4] Terabecquerels.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to hold a Planning Inquiry Commission to consider any proposals from UK Nirex for a deep repository for intermediate and low level radioactive waste.

Sir George Young: No. I am satisfied that a normal planning inquiry could deal satisfactorily with any planning application that Nirex may make.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the current proposals by UK Nirex for the development of an underground repository for intermediate and low level radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: None. UK Nirex Ltd. is currently consulting widely on its extensive revision of the design for a deep disposal facility for low and intermediate level radioactive waste.

Landfill Sites (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of landfill sites in County Durham at present used for dumping colliery waste; and when the dumping of colliery waste into the sea will cease.

Mr. Baldry: Information concerning the number of landfill sites used for dumping colliery waste is not held centrally.

Disposal on the beaches and at sea is licensed by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. On 14 June 1990, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced that the dumping of colliery waste on to beaches in the north-east of England should stop as soon as practicable. No application would be approved to permit the dumping of minestone on to beaches beyond December 1995, or offshore into the sea beyond December 1997, unless use of the planning system has shown that no practical land-based methods of disposal were available. This timetable allows for alternatives to be identified, necessary planning permissions to be sought and a chosen method to be identified.

The pipeline discharge of liquid tailings is carried out under consents given by the National Rivers Authority (NRA) under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. The NRA has also told British Coal that it expects early progress to be made on the identification of alternative disposal methods.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if people exempt from paying the community charge in the category "severely mentally impaired" will have to reapply for this status under the council tax.

Mr. Key: People who are severely mentally impaired will be eligible for discounts under the council tax. Local authorities will be required to take reasonable steps to ascertain whether discounts apply. Where such a person has been exempt from the personal community charge, a local authority should not need any further evidence that he is severely mentally impaired.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to bring forward regulations defining the conditions necessary to qualify as severely mentally impaired under the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Key: The local authority associations are currently being consulted about draft regulations. Copies of the draft were placed in the Library pursuant to a question on 31 January (column 642). Regulations will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible after the Bill receives Royal Assent.

Traveller's Sites

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the provisions of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 so far as they apply to the obligation placed on local authorities to provide sites for gipsies and other travellers.

Sir George Young: I know that the operation of the provisions for gipsies in the Caravan Sites Act 1968 gives rise to some difficulties, and the Government have the matter under review.

Gipsies

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available to his Department about the composition and numbers of gipsy communities in England and Wales.

Sir George Young: The Department asks local authorities to carry out a twice yearly count of gipsy caravans in their area on two specific days, in January and July each year. The statistics provided to the Department by local authorities in July 1991 showed a total of 12,316 caravans in England. The Welsh Office has responsibility for gipsies in Wales.

I am arranging for a copy of the July 1991 count to be placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Associations (Empty Properties)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing association properties were empty on the last date for which figures are available; and for how long.

Mr. Yeo: Information collected by the Housing Corporation shows that in March 1991, 16,400 housing association properties in England were empty (2·7 per cent. of the total stock).

The breakdown by duration of vacancy is as follows:

thousands

	Vacant and available for letting	Vacant and not available for letting[1]	All vacant
Less than six months	6·7	3·5	10·2
Six months—one year	0·4	1·8	2·2
Over one year	0·2	3·8	4·0
Total	7·3	9·1	16·4

[1] Many of these are dwellings which have been purchased and require rehabilitation before they are suitable for occupation.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish an inquiry into the alleged breaches of competition rules by private contractors with regard to compulsory competitive tendering in local authority sports and leisure management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: If the hon. Member wishes to provide details of the allegations to which he refers, then my right hon. Friend will consider whether action is appropriate.

Local Government Legislation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of all legislation introduced since October 1988 relating directly to local government.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 January 1992]: I attach a list of Public General Acts which have received Royal Assent since October 1988, and which relate directly to local government. Part I lists those Acts for which my Department has been responsible; part II lists those Acts for which other Departments have been responsible; and part III lists consolidation legislation (both DOE and other Government Departments).

Public General Acts which have received Royal Assent since October 1988 and which relate directly to local government

Part I: DOE Acts

Caravans (Standard Community Charge and Rating) Act 1991
Community Charges (General Reduction) Act 1991
Community Charges (Substitute Setting) Act 1991
Environmental Protection Act 1990
Housing Act 1988
Local Government Finance and Valuation Act 1991
Local Government and Housing Act 1989
Planning and Compensation Act 1991
Rate Support Grants Act 1988
Water Act 1989

Part II: Other Government Departments' Acts

Dangerous Dogs Act 1989
Dangerous Dogs Act 1991
Food Safety Act 1990
National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990
New Roads and Street Works Act 1991
Road Traffic Act 1988
Road Traffic Act 1991
Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988
School Teachers Pay and Conditions No. 2 Act

Part III: Consolidation Acts

Children Act 1989
Deer Act 1991
Land Drainage Act 1991
Planning (Consequential Provisions) Act 1990
Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990
Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990
Town and Country Planning Act 1990
Water Consolidation (Consequential Provisions) Act 1991

"Competing for Quality"

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to his consultation paper "Competing for Quality"; what proportion of responses were broadly against the proposals contained in the consultation document; if he will place those responses in the Library; and when the Government will publish their final proposals.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 February 1992]: To date my Department has received some 470 responses to the consultation paper "Competing for Quality—Competition in the Provision of Local Services". We have started to analyse those responses. We have indicated that we may wish to place in the Libraries of Parliament copies of all responses whose authors have not asked that they be treated as confidential. We shall publish our final proposals in due course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Annual Reports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to extend the requirement to report on employee involvement in company annual reports so as to include a report on employee involvement in any merger decisions.

Mr. Redwood: No. The existing provisions in schedule 7 of the Companies Act 1985 that companies with more than 250 employees should include a statement in their directors' report on their arrangements for informing and consulting employees on matters of concern to them in effect already cover this point.

Cigarette Advertising (Toys)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what controls the Government have over the sale of children's toys which carry cigarette brand logos.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has no controls over the sale of toys carrying cigarette brand logos. The use of cigarette brand logos on toys is a moral issue rather than a safety one and is not covered by the Toys (Safety) Regulations.

However, I understand that tobacco companies have not given permission for the use of their logos on toys.

Consumers can make it clear to suppliers of toys that they will not buy toys which bear cigarette brand logos.

Briefings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the date of each briefing his Department has afforded to hon. Members prior to visits to the former Soviet Union since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 6 February 1992]: Detailed records for the whole period since 1979 are not available.

Package Travel

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to consult interested parties on the draft regulations to implement the European Community package travel directive.

Mr. Leigh: Following the consultation period we initiated in July 1991, my Department has today issued for consultation draft regulations covering articles 1 to 6 of the directive. These lay down minimum standards for the way that consumers of packages are to be treated by the travel organiser and travel agent. In particular, the legislation:

- sets out the information to be included in brochures, and other information which must be supplied to the consumer before the start of the holiday;
- defines the circumstances in which changes may or may not be made to the particulars in the brochure;
- lays down the matters which must be included in the contract;
- regulates the circumstances in which surcharges can be made and provides that no price increases may be made within 30 days before departure;
- places the liability for the package on the other party to the contract with the consumer (usually the organiser).

These requirements will be backed up by a combination of new criminal offences and civil liabilities.

The circumstances under which surcharges are allowed have been brought into line with the voluntary code of practice operated by members of the Association of British Travel Agents. This has been done under the provision in the directive which allows us to adopt more stringent provisions to protect the consumer.

I expect to consult shortly on our proposals for implementing article 7 of the directive which requires organisers and/or retailers to show evidence of security for the refund of money paid over and for the repatriation of the consumer in the event of insolvency.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Uninsured Drivers

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were prosecuted for driving a vehicle whilst uninsured for the last three available years.

Mr. John Patten: The following table shows the number of court proceedings for the offence of using a motor vehicle uninsured against third party risks.

Proceedings for the offence of using motor vehicle uninsured against thrid party risks in England and Wales 1988-1990

Year	Number of offences
1988	294,966
1989	304,432
[1]1990	317,797

[1] Provisional

The number of people involved is likely to be less because some may have been proceeded against for more than one of these offences.

Jeremiah Miller

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received and if he will refer to the Court of Appeal for review of the sentence against Jeremiah Miller, presently a prisoner at Garth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have received and considered representations on the case from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill and from one other hon. Member. In the absence of anything new that appears to touch the safety of the conviction, there are not on present information grounds to justify intervention. I am always ready to consider any alleged new evidence.

Bail Offenders

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department has undertaken of re-offending on bail.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) on 6 February at column 247.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the claim of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Eastwood, who used to live at 33 Buxton road, Rock Ferry, Birkenhead, was first registered with the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; when he expects the board to come to a conclusion on the claim; and what is the average length of time the board now takes to settle claims.

Mr. John Patten: The administration of the criminal injuries compensation scheme and the determination of individual applications is entirely a matter for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. I am accordingly asking the board to reply directly to the hon. Member about this case.

The board does not produce statistics on the average time taken to settle claims. But percentages of cases resolved within certain periods of registration are given in the board's annual report, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Abdul Rauf

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department received a telex from the high commission in Islamabad inquiring about the outcome of an appeal by Mr. Abdul Rauf (Ref. IMM/V/24399/89; TH 19383/89) against refusal to grant him a visa to visit the United Kingdom; what reply has been sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A telex from the high commission in Islamabad about the outcome of Mr. Abdul Rauf's appeal was received on 12 December 1991. The Immigration and Nationality Department replied by telex on 19 December 1991 confirming that the appeal had been allowed, that the adjudicator had issued no directions, and that a further copy of the determination would be sent. A copy had been despatched to the high commission on 15 October 1990 but does not appear to have reached its destination. I very much regret that as a result the issue of Mr. Rauf's visa was delayed.

Asylum

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Turkish nationals have (a) sought asylum in the United Kingdom and (b) been granted asylum in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is given in the following table.

Information on applications in 1991 is available only for principal applicants excluding dependants, while for 1980-84 it is available only including dependants. Figures are therefore shown on both bases, where available, for comparison.

Applications[1] by Turkish nationals for refugee status or asylum in the United Kingdom and numbers granted[2] 1980-91

Police Cells (Lay Visitors)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what allowances or payments in compensation for loss of earnings are available to lay visitors to prisoners held in police cells.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Home Office guidance to police authorities is that travelling expenses will be payable to lay visitors on the same basis as to members of authorities when travelling on authority business.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the expenditure on mortgage interest tax relief for the calendar year 1991.

Mr. Maude: Tax relief is calculated for the fiscal year. Provisional estimates of the cost of mortgage interest tax relief for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are £7·7 billion, and £6·1 billion respectively.

Higher-rate Taxpayers

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many higher-rate taxpayers in 1992-93 he estimates will be using the married couple's allowance; and what proportion of higher-rate taxpayers this represents, assuming statutory indexation for 1992-93 limits and allowances.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that 1·1 million higher rate taxpayers—70 per cent. of the total—would be entitled to the married couple's allowance in 1992-93, assuming statutory indexation.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees participated in live registered profit-related pay schemes in the last period for which figures are available; how many schemes are in operation; and what is the estimated total value of those schemes.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 6 February 1992]: There were 581,000 participating employees in 2,049 live registered profit-related pay schemes at the end of December 1991. On the basis of the latest information provided by participating employers, the total annual value of the distributable PRP pool for these schemes is tentatively estimated at about £400 million.

PRIME MINISTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Harris: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the names of all persons who have served as special advisers to Ministers, by Department (a) from June 1987 to November 1990 and (b) since November 1990; and if he will indicate where possible the individual's prior profession or employment.

The Prime Minister: Information on the names of special advisers, including part-timers, and their Departments is as follows. Information on prior employment or profession is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Eggs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the respective responsibilities of the Minister of Agriculture and the Secretary of State for Health in ensuring that foreign imports of eggs are free of salmonella infection and satisfy the quality requirements of United Kingdom produced eggs.

The Prime Minister: The Secretary of State for Health has lead responsibility for the Imported Food Regulations 1984 which contain measures for the protection of public health in relation to imported food, including eggs. Responsibility for the enforcement of the regulations lies with local authorities and port health authorities. The Minister of Agriculture acted jointly with the Secretary of State for Health in the making of the regulations.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what specific procedures he has laid down for Ministers and Departments for the answering of hon. Members' urgent correspondence;

(2) what response times have been or will be established for departmental replies to hon. Members' letters under the citizens charter;

(3) what is the average time taken by Ministers to reply to hon. Members' letters in each Department.

The Prime Minister: Following the publication of the efficiency scrutiny of ministerial correspondence in December 1990, the Government have reinforced their efforts to ensure that letters from hon. Members receive proper consideration and replies within a reasonable time. These include extensive use of targets for reply times, monitoring and publication of performance against targets, and more efficient ways of dealing with letters within Departments and agencies. Departments will each publish their performance against targets for replies to ministerial correspondence.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what data information systems his Office has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office and 10 Downing street each have data information systems.

We have not been consulted with a view to taking part in other data information systems, and there are no current or planned links to the police national computer.

A X400 electronic mail link is planned between the networks, and in due course to other Government Departments.

The Data Protection Act applies to both systems and appropriate registrations have been made.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) men and (b) women under the age of 21 years who were registered as unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth on 31 January.

Mr. Jackson: Unemployment figures by age and duration are available on a quarterly basis and for standard age bands only. In October 1991, the latest available date, there were 500 male and 306 female unemployed claimants aged under 20 years in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Figures relating to January 1992 will be released on 18 February 1992.

Small Businesses

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the total number of firms in Great Britain employing (a) fewer than 20, (b) fewer than 10 and (c) fewer than five employees; if he will list these totals as a percentage of the total number of firms registered in Great Britain; if he will provide similar information for European Community and OECD countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The available information for the United Kingdom is given in the following table. I regret that comparable information for other countries is not available.

Number of businesses[1] by size band
United Kingdom; end 1989

[2]Employment size band	Number of businesses thousand	Share of total businesses per cent.
1 to 5	2,621	87·7

[1] Includes all businesses, whether registered for VAT or not.
[2] Total employment, including self-employed proprietors.

CIVIL SERVICE

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Cabinet Office (Office for the Minister for the Civil Service) has a number of networked data information systems in its buildings in London and Basingstoke.

We have not been consulted with a view to taking part in other data information systems, and there are no current or planned links to the police national computer.

An X400 electronic mail link is planned between each major network and to other Government Departments.

The 1984 Data Protection Act applies to the existing systems and the necessary registrations have been made.

WALES

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number, for each regional health authority, of in-patient residents in health service facilities for patients with a mental handicap for each year since 1981; and what proportion of the reduction in numbers is due to discharge and what proportion due to death, in each regional health authority.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not available in the exact form requested. There are no regional health authorities within Wales. The table gives information in respect of NHS hospital facilities in Wales for patients with a mental handicap. Deaths and discharges of patients from such facilities relate either to those patients resident at the end of the previous year or those who were admitted during the year.

Year	Resident patients[1]	Discharges[2] (per cent.)	Deaths[2] (per cent.)
1981	2,153	96·4	3·6
1982	2,103	96·3	3·7
1983	2,064	97·5	2·5
1984	1,962	97·5	2·5
1985	1,883	97·5	2·5
1986	1,792	97·5	2·5
1987	1,692	97·4	2·6

Ophthalmic Cases

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations have been made to the end of 1991 by West Glamorgan health authority for assistance with its waiting list for ophthalmic cases.

(2) what bids for funding under the waiting list initiative has been made by each health authority to clear waiting lists for ophthalmic operations.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To help with its ophthalmic waiting lists, West Glamorgan health authority made a bid for funds under the 1991-92 waiting times initiative. Out of the £1·3 million available at the all Wales level the authority received a total of £256,000, including £49,000 specifically for ophthalmic lists.

In addition, between March and December 1991, 85 West Glamorgan residents were referred to the two ophthalmic treatment centres at Bangor and Bridgend, and benefited from the opportunity to receive earlier treatment through this initiative which is unique to Wales.

West Glamorgan health authority has also received an extra £250,000 towards reducing waiting lists, part of an overall package of £1·8 million which I announced today. This is aimed at further reducing waiting lists throughout Wales.

West Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for which specialties West Glamorgan health authority has sought Welsh Office funding in each of the last five years and during 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Since April 1991, all health authorities have been funded to secure services for their resident population. Prior to the introduction of the National Health Service reforms, health authorities were funded on an historic basis, reflecting the level of specialties and services which they inherited in 1974 at the time of the National Health Service reorganisation.

Prior to the de-designation of regional services from 1 April 1991, West Glamorgan was also centrally funded to provide the following regional specialties:

Renal Dialysis
Radiotherapy and Oncology
Burns and Plastic Surgery Service Development

Since 1 April 1991, central funds have been devolved to user health authorities to contract with providing units for all former regional services on behalf of their resident populations. West Glamorgan health authority continues to be centrally funded for the burns and plastic surgery service development at Morriston hospital.

HEALTH

Management Executive

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the present work programme of the NHS management executive on the improvement of district purchasing functions; and how their purchasing functions are kept under review.

Mr. Dorrell: A range of project-based work is in progress which includes work on creating healthy alliances for joint purchasing between district health authorities, family health services authorities, local authorities and others; developing an intelligence capability; ways of involving local people in purchasing; setting priorities and monitoring and evaluating contract effectiveness. A series of epidemiologically-based needs assessments have also been commissioned and 11 learning networks have been sponsored with over 55 district health authorities purchasing teams participating. The management executive is also working closely with the regional health authorities in the development of regionally specific comprehensive purchaser development programmes for 1992-93.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of acute NHS hospital beds that would become vacant if people who are medically ready to leave hospital, and who have been made a firm offer of a place in a residential/nursing home, and were given a social fund community cost grant to bridge the financial difference between the residential fees charged by the receiving home and the current levels of DSS residential/nursing home fees.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available to prepare such an estimate.

Blood Plasma

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 180, if he will list the blood and plasma products in addition to source plasma exported from the United Kingdom by the bio products laboratory, or by a broker on behalf of the bio products laboratory, in each of the last two years; and if he will give the number of units of each product exported in total from the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is commercially confidential.

Geriatric Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many district health authorities have renegotiated contracts for geriatric care outside their authority boundaries; and if he will list them;

(2) for each district health authority, how many extra-contractual referrals for geriatric cases have been (a) made, (b) funded and (c) not funded since the introduction of the internal market in April 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effect of the National Health Service internal market on cross-boundary flows for geriatric cases.

Mr. Dorrell: We are satisfied that the contractual arrangements introduced by health authorities provide for the great majority of referrals and that, where no contract is in place, there are arrangements for making extra-contractual referrals.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the budget for the Health Education Authority between 1 April 1990 and 30 September 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The total allocation to the Health Education Authority for 1990-91 was £28,749,000 and for 1991-92 is £31,427,000. There is no specific budget for part of a financial year.

Health Promotion

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure by district health authorities on health promotion between 1 April 1990 and 31 September 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: Financial returns submitted to the Department by district health authorities in England for the financial year 1990-91 separately identify revenue expenditure on health promotion and education totalling some £71 million—a provisional figure at this stage. Equivalent information is not collected on an in-year basis.

The expenditure recorded in the annual financial returns relates only to the direct costs of health education and promotion departments and specific campaigns organised by or on behalf of the health authorities. Some direct costs of clinical medical officers, health visitors and other health professionals (for the time they are engaged on specific health education work in the community) are included but the financial returns do not capture all expenditure related to health promotion in its broadest sense. For example, it would be impracticable to identify and cost all health education and promotional advice routinely provided during the course of hospital consultations and treatment.

Patient Statistics

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the number of (a) in-patients, (b) day patients and (c) total patients treated in the year 1990-91 on a basis (i) comparable to the published figures for 1989-90 and (ii) comparable to the figures published in the review of the six months April to September 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is in the table. Figures published in the Department of Health "Statistical Bulletin" are from the KP70 annual statistical return. Those used in the review of the six months April to September 1991 are from NHSME regional monitoring returns. These two returns are collected through different processes and some groups of patients are included in one but not the others (eg. well babies who appear in the KP70 returns but not the NHSME returns). Discussions are held with regions each year to validate the difference between the two sets of figures.

National Census

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are made for the sale of information obtained through the official national census.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 February 1992]: Printed census reports to Parliament are sold at HMSO bookshops. Other statistical information for areas in England and Wales from the census is available on request to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. A charge is made to recover the cost of extracting such information from the census data base and presenting it in the form required.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information obtained through the national census is distributed in any form which gives details of postal codes.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 February 1992]: Statistics from the 1991 census will be available for postcode sectors (containing about 2,000 households each on average). An enumeration district to postcode directory will be available for England and Wales, enabling census users to relate statistics for census enumeration districts to the aggregations of postcode units which most nearly approximate those districts. Census users will also be able to request statistics for areas defined by them as particular aggregations of postcodes. These will be provided only if the areas requested are sufficiently large, and sufficiently different from standard areas, for confidentiality to be safeguarded.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what income is received from the sale of information obtained by the national census for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 February 1992]: The income received by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys from the sale of census statistics over the five financial years from April 1986 to March 1991 is as follows:

Financial year	Income (£ thousand)
1986-87	346
1987-88	194
1988-89	110
1989-90	62
1990-91	53

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organisations or companies have directly purchased information collected by the national census in the last 10 years; and what public record is kept of such usage.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 February 1992]: In the last 10 years the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has met approximately 12,000 requests for census statistics from central and local government, health authorities, public corporations and banks, and from insurance, retail and other commercial companies, and the academic sector.

Records of all sales of specially commissioned statistics are held by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for public viewing in St. Catherine's house, London and at Titchfield in Hampshire.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Spending Power

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the net weekly spending power of a man, wife and two children aged 13 and 16 years, and that of a single parent family with two children aged 13 and 16 years whose income in both cases is (a) £150 per week, (b) £175 per week and (c) £200 per week, on the same basis as shown for the two-parent family in the taxation benefit model tables pages 108-110.

Mr. Jack: The information is given in the tables. All assumptions are set out in the published tax/benefit model tables. Each family is assumed to live in council property appropriate to its size and to pay estimated average rent and community charge.

In recognition of the fact that lone parents have different employment opportunities available to them compared with couples, income tax personal allowances and the adult credit within family credit is the same for both family types. In addition a lone parent receives one parent benefit at £5.60 a week.

It should be noted that the results in the tables remain arbitrary. They cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people, and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large. The tables use hypothetical rents, so they do not reflect the full range of housing costs which people can pay.

My hon. Friend may further wish to note that the tax/benefit model tables show the total net income on income support for each family type and this information has been included in the tables.

Claimants (Compensation)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend his Department's standing instructions in the departmental administrative code that deals with compensation for benefit claimants to include automatic payment to compensate for pain, suffering and loss of amenity.

Miss Widdecombe: Customers who suffer actual financial loss or whose benefit has been delayed unduly, as a result of clear and unambiguous official error, may receive ex-gratia payments.

Departmental Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long each computerised system in his Department would take to return to full operation in the event of a disaster.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has carried out a risk assessment for each of its computer systems and has adopted appropriate measures to minimise risks.

In the more important systems for administering social security benefits, high priority is given to business continuity. Computer capacity has deliberately been distributed round a number of linked computer processing centres and the communications network has been designed with sufficient flexibility and capacity to minimise the disruption caused by serious breakdown from whatever cause, and priorities have been established to reduce as far as possible the impact on the service to the public.

Timescales for recovery vary according to the cause of the disruption and the system involved for example whether it is a single office, a single system or a complete computer centre. Procedures and equipment have been developed to enable records to be reconstructed from archive material and to transfer workloads from operational computers to those used for non-operational work, such as systems for testing new developments and for maintenance.

These recovery procedures are tested regularly.

Residential Homes (Fees)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the additional cost to the DSS budget of providing a social fund community care grant to bridge the financial difference between the residential fees charged by residential nursing homes and the current levels of DSS residential/nursing home fees in circumstances where providing such a grant would allow a patient on NHS acute hospital bed to vacate their hospital bed and accept a place in the receiving residential/nursing home.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the reduction of the state pension of persons spending more than six weeks in hospital.

Miss Widdecombe: In the last year we have received just over 200 letters on this subject.

Management Facilities

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer 3 February, Official Report, column 98, if he will list the current operational documents which are available to hon. Members on (a) FAMIS, (b) interim resource management facilities and (c) the devolved personnel management system.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not normal practice or policy for internal operational documents to be lodged in the Library or the Public Information Office.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 160, if he will make it his policy to continue to list in the Official Report, in answer to parliamentary questions, areas where cold weather payments have been made.

Mr. Scott: It remains our firm policy that where information is routinely available in the Library it need not be repeated in the Official Report.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 92, if he will estimate the offsetting savings on expenditure on income-related benefits, in each case.

Mr. Jack: Based on the latest available information, the estimates are in the table:

	Gross cost £ million	Offsetting savings £ million
Eldest child	355	95
Other children	285	85
Total	640	[1]180

[1] In calculating the net cost of £450 million given in the previous reply, allowance was also made for a further saving of £10 million from making the normal adjustments to child dependency increases payable with certain national insurance benefits.

National Insurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the percentage of salary paid in national insurance contributions by persons earning annual salaries of £5,000, £15,000, £20,000, £50,000, £100,000 and £200,000 in (a) 1979 and (b) 1991.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is in the table:

Annual salary £	NI contributions paid by employees as a percentage of salary 1979-80[1] Per cent.	1991-92[2] Per cent.
5,000	6·5	5·2

Note:

[1] Upper earnings limit at 1979-80 level of £7,020 per annum.

[2] Upper earnings limit at today's level of £20,280 per annum.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the (a) marginal and (b) cumulative reduction in revenue for successive reductions by steps of £10 per week of the upper earnings limit for employees' national insurance contributions from its current level, and corresponding figures for increasing the lower earnings limit by steps of £10 per week.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to change the threshold for small employers' relief under the statutory sick pay scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Employers whose total national insurance contributions liability is below a certain level, currently £15,000 are able to revert to 100 per cent. reimbursement of statutory sick pay paid after the employee has been sick for more than six weeks. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has reviewed this figure and proposes, subject to parliamentary approval, that it should be increased to £16,000 from April.

Rent Arrears

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether arrangements to recover rent arrears from local authority tenants by charging rent supplements to individual tenants with rent arrears in addition to their normal rent qualify for housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: Housing benefit is designed to help people meet their current rent liabilities. It is clearly inappropriate that individual rent supplements levied on tenants to recover their arrears of rent, which may not originally have been met through housing benefit, should now qualify for it. I have therefore today laid before Parliament the Housing Benefit (General) Amendment Regulations 1992, in order to put beyond doubt that such supplements should not form part of eligible rent for housing benefit purposes.

Medical Examinations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were examined by doctors acting for his Department over the last 12 months for the purpose of assessing (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) attendance allowance where the claimant was aged over 65 years; what was the average fee paid to doctors for such examinations; and what was the overall cost to his Department of these examinations.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 21 January 1992, c. 175]: The following information, in the second paragraph was incorrect,

"There were 262,000 claims for mobility allowance."

The correct information is as follows:

"There were 231,000 claims for mobility allowance."

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mourne House, Newcastle

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have been held with Age Concern concerning the transfer of Mourne house, Newcastle, from the ownership of the Eastern health and social services board.

Mr. Hanley: I understand that the Eastern health and social services board have had discussions in the past with Age Concern about the possibility of leasing Mourne house to it and that these discussions concluded without agreement. The board will be considering proposals from the local unit of management for the provision of services for the elderly in the Newcastle area at its next meeting on 13 February.

119. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates the Eastern health and social services board carried out renovations to Mourne house, Newcastle, between 1 April 1973 to 31 March 1991; and if he will specify the nature of those renovations.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not collected centrally. The hon. Gentleman may wish to contact the chairman of the Eastern health and social services board, Mr. Norman Ferguson, CBE.

District Nurses

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by health authority the number of full-time equivalent district nursing posts and the number of potential elderly domiciliary clients, as defined by the Department of the Environment under section 80 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, for years 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Hanley: This legislation does not extend to Northern Ireland.

Moneyreagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the population of Moneyreagh village in 1981 and 1991; and how many new dwellings, for which full planning permission has been issued, are still to be constructed at Moneyreagh.

Mr. Needham: The population for Moneyreagh village in 1981 was 879. The corresponding figure for 1991 will not be available until the autumn.

Within Moneyreagh village (ie excluding the rural area) there is approval for 120 houses on which no work has started. There are 13 houses under construction at present.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Widgery Tribunal

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will list the precedents for examining the evidence at tribunals to discover if all the conclusions remain valid; and if he will re-examine the Widgery tribunal on the same basis;

(2) what procedural methods are available to be used for an official reconsideration and examination of the forensic evidence presented to the tribunal on the deaths in Northern Ireland on 30 January 1972.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have been asked to reply.

I am not aware of any precedent for the re-examination of evidence presented to a tribunal held under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act 1921 such as that conducted by Lord Widgery into the tragic events in Londonderry on 30 January 1972. The Government accept the conclusion reached by the Royal Commission on Tribunals of Inquiry (Cmnd 3121) in 1966, and endorsed in the White Paper "Tribunals of Inquiry set up under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act 1921" (Cmnd 5313) in 1973, that the findings of such tribunals should be treated as final.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Computer Safety

Mr. Hain: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will seek to establish a Select Committee to monitor computer safety.

Mr. MacGregor: No.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

(COCOM)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of COCOM.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The rationale for COCOM's existence has been the strategic threat posed to the west by a number of countries, mainly the former Warsaw pact and China.

COCOM is now actively considering its future role in light of the changed circumstances of the countries of eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. It is too early to present firm conclusions.

CSCE

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the outcome of the recent conference of foreign Ministers of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the meeting of the CSCE Council in Prague on 30 and 31 January, Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to pursue the objectives set out in the "Charter of Paris for a New Europe". They adopted the Prague document on the further development of CSCE institutions and structures to support this aim. The Ministers welcomed ten republics of the former Soviet Union as new participating states of the CSCE, and granted observer status to Croatia and Slovenia. At my suggestion, Ministers decided on the early despatch of a rapporteur mission to Armenia and Azerbaijan, and called for an interim report on the situation in Nagorno-Karabakh.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he took part in party-political activities in addition to official duties on his visits to Hong Kong in April and September 1991.

Mr. Hurd: I saw fellow Conservatives briefly in Hong Kong in September.

Mr. Abdul Rauf

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Abdul Rauf (Ref: GV160/13294) is going to be issued with a visa to visit the United Kingdom; when Mr. Rauf applied for a visit visa; when his appeal against refusal to grant the visa was upheld; when the high commission in Islamabad was advised to issue the visa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The high commission in Islamabad issued a visit visa to Mr. Abdul Rauf on 12 January 1992.

Mr. Rauf had applied for a visa on 20 August 1989. Following an interview at the high commission on 3 September 1989 his application was refused. He appealed against the refusal decision on 7 November 1989 and the entry clearance officer's explanatory statement was sent to the appellate authorities on 5 December 1989. The high commission heard nothing more until it received a copy of the letter which the hon. Member wrote to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Home Office on 5 November 1991 (which was subsequently transferred to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for action). The high commission then made inquiries of the Home Office who advised, on the 19 December 1991, that the appeal had been allowed on 1 August 1990. On 30 December 1991 the high commission invited Mr. Rauf to call with a view to issuing entry clearance.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Minister of State took part in party-political activities in addition to official duties on his visits to Hong Kong in January, July and December 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend, the Minister of State saw fellow Conservatives briefly in Hong Kong in January.

Peru

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss human rights in Peru when he meets Preident Fujimori of Peru on 5 February.

Mr. Garel-Jones: [pursuant to his reply, 6 February 1992, c. 215]: The Prime Minister met President Fujimori on 5 February. His discussions covered a wide range of issues of common interest, including human rights.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 3 February.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council on 3 February. The council agreed measures giving the five republics co-operating with Lord Carrington's peace conference—Slovenia, Croatia, Montenegro, Bosnia-Hercegovina and Macedonia—the trade benefits of the former EC-Yugoslavia trade and co-operation agreement. These benefits will extend until the end of 1992.

The council agreed at my suggestion that emergency food should be delivered to cities other than Moscow and St. Petersburg from within the existing EC humanitarian food aid programme for the former Soviet Union. It invited EC Finance Ministers to look at ways of taking forward disbursement of EC food and medical credits for the newly independent states. The council reviewed the outcome of the Washington conference on aid to the former Soviet Union and agreed that the follow-up conference in Lisbon should be carefully prepared. The council agreed a case-by-case approach to negotiating trade and co-operation agreements with the republics of the former Soviet Union and the Baltic states.

The council reviewed the European economic area negotiations in the light of the European Court of Justice's opinion on the proposed judicial arrangements. The council reaffirmed the need to bring the negotiations to an early and successful conclusion.

The council discussed follow-up to the Maastricht Council. It agreed that officials should begin work in Brussels on necessary institutional questions, including establishing the right infrastructure for the provisions in the treaty on a common foreign and security policy and on justice and home affairs. The council agreed to the amendments to the European Coal and Steel Community and European Atomic Energy Community treaties set out in the relevant articles of the treaty on political union.

The council discussed the financial protocols for Syria and Morocco under the new Mediterranean policy in the light of the European Parliament's decision to withhold its assent to these protocols. The Commission presented a communication on export controls on dual-use foods. The council decided to remit this to the Committee of Permanent Representatives for further examination.

Ministers agreed that the Organisation of American States should be consulted about the possible denunciation of the Lomé Convention with respect to Haiti. An EC-Paraguay trade and co-operation agreement was signed in the margins of the council. After conciliation with the European Parliament, agreement was reached on the regulations governing the Asia-Latin America programme and EC-investment partners facility.

ENERGY

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he took part in party-political activities in addition to official duties on his visit to Hong Kong in November 1991.

Mr. Wakeham: I saw fellow Conservatives briefly in Hong Kong in November.

TRANSPORT

Bowbelle and Bow Trader

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the collisions between (a) the Bowbelle and bridges, (b) the Bowbelle and other vessels, (c) the Bow Trader and bridges and (d) the Bow Trader and other vessels on the River Thames each year since 1981; and what was the total number of collisions on the Thames in each of those years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The only collisions with a bridge recorded for the subject ships occurred in 1982, when Bowbelle made contact with scaffolding at Cannon street railway bridge, and in 1989 when Bowbelle struck the same bridge immediately after colliding with Marchioness. The information on other collisions and contacts is in the table; it covers all contacts including those with stationary objects as well as other vessels. The last column includes all types of vessel including small craft such as rowing boats.

DEFENCE

MOD Harrogate

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 729, whether his investigations into the relative costs of MOD Harrogate and RAF Wyton have assumed that both establishments will in the future be required to house and support substantial numbers of Royal Air Force uniformed personnel.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes. Substantial numbers of RAF personnel will need to be housed and supported wherever RAF logistic support staffs are stationed.

RAF Units

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 730, if he will give the reasons why quantitative assessments of changes in capability of selected Royal Air Force units have not been undertaken.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ground forces in Europe are scheduled to undergo extensive change over the coming decade. The assessments of the relative capabilities of British Army units arose from an examination of the implications of these plans for the balance of forces in Europe. Forecast changes in the structure of air forces are less extensive and have not been assessed in the same depth.

Defence Budget

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 729, if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which he would provide details of the contents of the long-term costings of the defence budget, as referred to in the answer of 2 May 1991, Official Report, column 292.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As made clear in my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement's answer on 2 May 1991, the long term costing is intended for internal planning purposes. Plans for defence expendiure for the period covered by the public expenditure survey are published each autumn. Further information is made available in the "Statement on Defence Estimates". Approval to commit expenditure is subject to separate procedures and information on plans for and progress of individual projects is made available as appropriate.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 730, what information is held centrally regarding (a) higher-level budgets, (b) intermediate higher-level budgets and (c) basic-level budgets.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information relating to estimated future expenditure is held centrally for higher level budgets and for those intermediate higher level budgets that report directly to top level budgets. Expenditure in the current financial year is monitored centrally for top level budgets.

Defence Budget (BAOR)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number and names of the higher-level budget holders within the top-level budget held by the Commander-in-Chief British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are three higher level budget holders under the Commander-in-Chief British Army of the Rhine. these are:

Assistant Chief of Staff, General Staff Division 1, Headquarters British Army of the Rhine.

Deputy Chief of Staff, Headquarters British Army of the Rhine, General Staff Division 3.

Assistant Chief of Staff, General Staff Division 4, Headquarters British Army of the Rhine.

Management Strategy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the release of information on the new management strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Within the usual constraints of security and expense, my Department's policy is to be as open as possible in releasing information about the new management strategy. Recent "Statements on the Defence Estimates" and "Defence Open Government Document 89/11" have reported on the strategy. This flow of information will continue.

Financial Planning and Management Group

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the numbers, types and ranks of MoD personnel who are part of the financial planning and management group.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The financial planning and management group of the Ministry of Defence is chaired by the Permanent Under-Secretary and currently includes the Chief of the Defence Staff, Chief of the Naval Staff, Chief of the General Staff, Chief of the Air Staff, Vice Chief of the Defence Staff, Chief of Defence Procurement, 2nd Permanent Under-Secretary and Chief Scientific Adviser.

Departmental Plans

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place declassified copies of (a) his departmental plan and (b) his plan objectives in the Library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence's departmental plan is intended primarily for internal management and control purposes and is thus not suitable for publication. An essay on the plan was published, however, in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991", Vol. 1, (Cm. 1559) Page 55.

Management Strategy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce (a) new information technology and (b) new training programmes fully to realise the benefits of the new management strategy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is developing strategies for the introduction of further information technology across the Department and has recently let a contract worth in the region of £250 million over five years for a new system in headquarters, known as CHOTS. Training programmes to support the new management strategy are constantly under review and are modified and extended as necessary.

RAF Logistic Support

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31, January, Official Report, column 729, when the investigations into the consolidation of Royal Air Force logistic support began; when they will be completed; what strategic assessments have been made as part of these investigations; what consulations he has had with his NATO counterparts regarding these investigations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The investigations began following consideration of the PROSPECT study of the reorganisation of MOD headquarters in March 1991. Studies on the future organisation of RAF logistics support are expected to be completed by the summer. The relevant strategic assessments are those underpinning Britain's defence for the 1990s. Within NATO, logistics is a national responsibility and formal consultation with the Alliance is not necessary. We have given a firm undertaking to consult the trade unions and local MPs before decisions are taken.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he took part in party-political activities in addition to official duties on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence meets fellow Conservatives from time to time in the margins of public duties both in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 10 February 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals

36. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he intends to take to speed up the process of hearing immigration appeals.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor is in the process of appointing an extra three full-time and 25 part-time adjudicators, with a corresponding addition to support staff. The multi-terminal case-tracking computer system is now also in operation.

Serious Fraud Office

37. Mr. McFall: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to widen the remit of the Serious Fraud Office; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The statutory remit of the Serious Fraud Office is to investigate and prosecute suspected offences involving serious complex fraud. I do not consider any revision necessary.

38. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration has been given to the introduction of performance targets for the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office annual report for 1990-1991 set out performance targets for the investigative stages and completion of cases. The Serious Fraud Office is developing further performance indicators.

Alexander Saharievski

Mr. Alton: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the case of the abduction of Alexander Saharievski from his home in Liverpool.

The Attorney-General: Both the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia, to which Alexander Saharievski was taken by his father, have signed and ratified the Hague convention on the civil aspects of international child abduction. An obstacle to the making of an application for Alexander's return to this country was presented by the fact that Yugoslavia has not yet been able to designate a central authority for the processing of applications under the convention. However, the staff of the child abduction unit of the Lord Chancellor's Department, which provides the central authority for England and Wales, and of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have been able to assist in finding a lawyer in Yugoslavia for Alexander's mother and in securing the agreement of the Macedonian Ministry of Justice to accept an application under the convention and the urgent assistance of the local authorities in Yugoslavia in tracing Alexander's current whereabouts. Staff will continue to assist in any way they can, and it is hoped that it will not be long before Alexander can be reunited with his mother.

Solicitors

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on time taken from receipt of claim to the payment of solicitors in the No. 3 (southern) legal aid area.

The Attorney-General: Details on the time taken from receipt of claim to the payment of solicitors in the No. 3 legal aid area are kept in the form of percentages of set targets for the board. Legal aid area No. 3 experienced difficulties early last year but these have now been addressed and the area is now regularly surpassing its targets. Its oldest claim awaiting assessment and payment dates from 9 December 1991.

Figures are available for a 12-month period and are set out in the table.

NATIONAL FINANCE

General Fund

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of the subsidy that was collected into the general fund in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Mellor: Her Majesty's Treasury does not possess a general fund.

Company Directors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those companies where he has a right to appoint directors, whether as a result of special shares or otherwise; how those powers of appointment have been exercised, and whom he has appointed, since 1987.

Mr. Maude: There are no companies to which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has the right to appoint directors.

Personal Information

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to allow a taxpayer to consent to, or be aware of, those uses and disclosures of personal information that are not obvious at the time the taxpayer provides the information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: None. The circumstances in which information concerning taxpayers held by the Inland Revenue or Customs and Excise may be disclosed outside those departments without the consent of the taxpayer are very limited.

Under section 182 of the Finance Act 1989 it is an offence for tax officials to make disclosures other than in the course of their duties. The circumstances in which such disclosures might be authorised are limited to occasions when the confidentiality obligation is specifically overridden by statute or where a serious crime such as murder or treason is involved.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will include in the citizens charter plans to ensure that the citizen's consent is obtained prior to the use and disclosure of personal information relating to the citizen that are not obvious at the time the citizen provides the information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have no plans to include such a proposal in the citizens charter.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he intends to take relating to the tax-exempt special savings account regulations in the light of the seventh report from the Data Protection Registrar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: No action is necessary. The TESSA regulations are well suited to their intended purpose. The information requirements have been kept to a minimum to make the scheme as simple as possible. Use of the national insurance number as a tax reference is long established. As the report of the Data Protection Registrar acknowledges, the Inland Revenue has made it clear that such information may be used only for the purpose of validating applications.

Income Statistics

Mr. Carr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many self-employed people had incomes (a) below £3,000, (b) between £3,000 and £5,900, (c) between £5,900 and £15,000, (d) between £15,000 and £20,000, (e) between £20,000 and £25,000, (f) between £25,000 and £33,000, (g) between £33,000 and £40,000, (h) between £40,000 and £50,000 and (i) above £50,000 in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: Estimates, based on projections of information from 1989-90 are as follows:

Estimated numbers of taxpaying individuals with main source of income from self-employment

Annual gross income[1] (£)	Number in 1990-91 (000s)	Number in 1991-92 (000s)
3,000- 5,900	340	280
5,900-15,000	1,500	1,490
15,000-20,000	350	410
20,000-25,000	180	200
25,000-33,000	150	180
33,000-40,000	70	80
40,000-50,000	60	70
Over 50,000	120	140

Shareholders

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 14 November 1990, Official Report, column 150, as to the number of individual shareholders retaining shares in each of the concerns privatised since 1979.

Mr. Maude: The table shows the number of shareholdings in each of the companies privatised since 1979. Where Her Majesty's Government retained a shareholding on privatisation, together with the size and date of any subsequent share disposals, this has also been shown.

Shareholdings[1] in privatised and former Government-controlled companies

Notes:

[1] For single company privatisations, these figures are not an exact guide to the number of shareholders because some shareholdings are held jointly in more than one name.

[2] Her Majesty's Government obtained a majority holding in 1914 but this never reached 100 per cent. The 1977 sale is shown as the first disposal of recent times.

[3] These proportions do not sum to 51 per cent. because of rights issues.

[4] Subsidiary of BL plc.

[5] The offer allowed for holdings by individuals in any or all of the companies in the offer and therefore holders may appear on more than one register.

[6] Shareholders may appear on the register of more than one company.

[7] The offer required public applicants to apply for shares in both companies.

[8] The offer required non-customer public applicants to apply for shares in both companies.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring up to date table F8 of the January 1992 issue of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics."

Mr. Mellor: The information for the table in question is provided by the International Monetary Fund. I regret that it has not been forthcoming from that source for recent quarters.

Manufactured Goods (Import Content)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish his estimate of the import content of goods manufactured in the United Kingdom in 1970, 1979, 1985 and each of the years from 1989 to 1991.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available analysis is for 1985. Central Statistical Office's published input—output tables for that year and the two earlier years (1) show the imported and domestic content of manufactures. These publications are available in the Library.

(1) "Input-Output Tables for the United Kingdom, 1985" table 4, "Input-Output Tables for the United Kingdom, 1979" table K, "Input-Output Tables for the United Kingdom, 1970" table K.

CIVIL SERVICE

Recruitment and Assessment Services

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what plans he has for redundancy of staff at Recruitment and Assessment Services or any other civil service agency.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 7 February 1992]: In view of the financial position of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency the chief executive is looking at all options for improvement. Staff numbers are being reduced in various ways, including transfers to other Departments and the offer of early retirement. Other measures will need to be taken if these prove insufficient. There can be no undertaking at this stage that there may not be a requirement for redundancies.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement on the financial position of the Recruitment and Assessment Services civil service agency; and when he expects a report to be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 7 February 1992]: Because of a sharp fall in the recruitment business placed with the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency, it is unlikely to cover its full costs by income from its customers in its first year. However, the agency aims to break even in the first three years of trading. The agency will publish its first annual report and accounts later in the year.

THE ARTS

Arts Spending (South Hams)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the amount of public subsidy spent on the arts in the South Hams parliamentary constituency in each of the last three years.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 6 February 1992]: The amount spent by the South West regional arts board in the South Hams parliamentary constituency in each of the last three years is as follows:

	£
1988-89	36,408
1989-90	33,824
1990-91	37,433

ENVIRONMENT

Community Charge

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities in rank order of the additional community charge levied in 1991-92 to cover non-collection, showing which party, if any, is in overall control.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount was subtracted from the standard spending assessments of London boroughs and the City of London, to reflect the fact that those authorities do not provide support for public transport, in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The amount subtracted for 1991-92 was £160·037 million. For 1992-93 a different approach has been used which involves separate formulae to reflect the fact that public transport support is provided centrally in London but not in the rest of the country. As a result there is no comparable 1992-93 figure.

Cash Limits

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes any changes to his Department's cash limits for Property Holdings for 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: Yes, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VIII vote 7 will be increased by a token £1,000. Excess receipts, which were to be surrendered to the Consolidated Fund, will be used to offset increased expenditure on freehold acquisitions, accommodation services for the Houses of Parliament and a shortfall of property disposal receipts; the supplementary estimate will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The running cost limit of £57,031,000 will be reduced by £2,227,000 to £54,804,000 as a result of delays in filling vacant posts and to offset increased expenditure on other administrative subheads.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limit on Property Services Agency Services vote in 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VIII vote 13 will be increased by £135,105,000 from £90,947,000 to £226,052,000. £50,000,000 of the increase will be offset by receipts from other Departments relating to the recovery of prior years' works expenditure. The remainder will be charged to the reserve. There will, therefore, be no addition to the planned total of public expenditure.

The increase will enable PSAS to bring into account in its 1991-92 appropriation accounts any works contractors bills which will be paid by PSAS on behalf of other vote funded Departments but which, in the event, it will not have recovered in time for inclusion with those Departments' accounts.

Waste Water

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total percentage of waste water (a) treated at inland works and receiving secondary or tertiary treatment, (b) treated at inland works and receiving primary treatment or less, (c) discharged at sea through properly designed long outfalls and (d) discharged into the sea without treatment in each water authority area in England.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the following three reports: House of Lords' Select Committee on the European Communities, Session 1990-91, 10th report, "Municipal Waste Water Treatment"—House of Lords paper 50-I of 14 May 1991; the study of coastal and sewage discharges carried out for my Department by Consultants in Environmental Services, a copy of which is in the Library; and "Waterfacts 1990" published by the Water Services Association, a copy of which is also in the Library.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will initiate new measures within his Department, in conjunction with English Heritage, to draw up a scheme whereby the reasons for the listing of buildings are fully examined when decisions are both positive and negative.

Mr. Yeo: The Secretary of State has published national criteria for listing in DOE circular 8/87 and takes careful account of English Heritage's advice, and of any other representations, before reaching his decisions. When a building is listed, the list entry identifies the main features which are considered to justify the listing. When a building is not listed, reasons for the decision are given; but whether a building is or is not of special architectural or historic interest will inevitably often be a matter of judgment.

Manchester Concert Hall

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement about the funding of the proposed new concert hall in Manchester.

Sir George Young: The Government have already set aside £15 million towards the cost of this project in the budget of the Central Manchester development corporation. Despite a proposed contribution from Manchester city council, there remains a funding gap. Discussions are continuing about how to bridge it.

Emissions (Central London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the air quality results for central London for June and December each year from 1980 to the present for carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, sulphur dioxide and low-level ozone and any other relevant measurements for which he has results.

Mr. Baldry: The table shows the average figures for the months of June and December at the central London site, with the maximum hourly level reached in that month for carbon monoxide (CO), sulphur dioxide (SO_2), ozone (O_3) and nitrogen dioxide (NO_2). No measurement data in this format are available for carbon dioxide.

Poll Tax

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has as to the percentage of those people taken to court for failure to pay poll tax that have (a) been receiving rebate and (b) have been on the maximum rebate of 80 per cent.

Mr. Key: My Department does not collect this information.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake immediately to sign on behalf of Her Majesty's Government the Montreal protocol treaty on substances that deplete the ozone layer.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom was among the first 25 signatories to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer in September 1987. The United Kingdom ratified the amendment to the protocol in December 1991.

Housing (Capital Funding)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to give tenant-control initiatives similar status to initiatives such as housing action trusts, the city challenge and estate action schemes when allocating capital funding.

Mr. Key: No. Housing action trusts, estate action and city challenge are all ways of better targeting resources, and tenant management or control of housing estates is one important ingredient in them. It would not be right to treat tenant control in isolation as a means of targeting scarce capital resources: tenants taking on such responsibilities need the support that comes from sound management, strategies and policies.

Urban Programme (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the allocated amounts for each item in the urban programme funding for Bradford announced on 16 January which make up the total of £4·491 million.

Mr. Key [holding answer 5 February 1992]: Bradford's initial allocation for 1992-93 is as follows:

	£ million
Capital	3·234
Revenue	1·257
Total	4·491

The authority will receive its final allocation when its urban programme is approved by the Department.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Trading

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been on public order and trespass charges of persons protesting at breaches of the Sunday trading laws in the last six months.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected centrally.

Crime Statistics (Warrington)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give crime figures for Warrington for each year since 1979 in the categories: offences against the person, sexual offences against women, robbery, burglary (domestic), burglary (other), theft of vehicle, theft from vehicle, theft of pedal cycles, theft from shops, obtaining property by deception, criminal damage, drug trafficking and other crimes.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Credit Card Fraud

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the amount of police time that is spent on investigating credit card fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the amount of credit card fraud in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: A Home Office report "The Prevention of Cheque and Credit Card Fraud" published in June last year, estimated that the losses to the major retail banks from all forms of "plastic card" fraud amounted to £121 million in 1990; of this sum, about £68 million was attributable to credit card fraud.

My right hon. Friend met senior financial sector representatives on 26 June and 15 October last year to discuss initiatives for tackling credit card and cheque fraud. He indicated that he wished to see as rapid progress as possible. It is intended that a further meeting should take place soon.

Eavesdropping Devices

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what legitimate purposes he considers eavesdropping devices may be used by the general public as indicated in his letter to the hon. Member for Newport, West of 18 January.

Mrs. Rumbold: Devices that amplify and transmit sound can be used for entirely innocuous purposes including birdwatching, monitoring the sleep of children or aiding those whose hearing is impaired.

Magistrates Court Houses

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the policy guidelines for the closure of magistrates courthouses; and if he will make a statement on the position of the Government with regard to the local provision of justice.

Mr. John Patten: As part of their management responsibilities, magistrates courts committees, in consultation with their paying local authorities, must keep under review the number and location of their courthouses, paying close attention to the amount of work which is undertaken at them. It would be a mistake to think that arguments of efficiency would inevitably draw a committee towards closing smaller courthouses or that keeping courthouses open, whatever the circumstances, must inevitably be in the interests of providing a good quality of service for court users.

So far as efficiency is concerned, in some cases it is clearly very difficult to justify keeping a courthouse open. There are a number of courthouses throughout the country that are used for only a limited period each week or even more infrequently, and which are costly in various ways to maintain. Some are only a short distance from other courthouses which have spare capacity.

On the other hand, courts committees need to approach issues of efficiency in a broad and not a narrow way, recognising the interdependence of criminal justice agencies, practitioners and the courts. Committees will need to take account of the possible effects of a closure on the operation of other local services. It is also very important for efficiency improvements to be pursued across the whole range of magistrates courts operations, and not simply in relation to courthouse accommodation. Courthouses are an important local resource and should not be proposed for closure because other savings require more effort to achieve.

But local justice does not and cannot mean that every town or community throughout England and Wales should have its own courthouse. It is also important that courthouses should offer good standards of facilities and service. Unfortunately many courthouses are old or unsuitable buildings, lacking even basic facilities for court users. It would simply not be realistic or affordable to expect that all could be brought up to an acceptable standard. Courts committees will need to consider the balance of advantage between maintaining unsatisfactory courthouses and providing good facilities and accommodation through selective closures.

Each courts committee will obviously also need to take into account the amount of grant within the cash limit for its area. Courts committees can themselves influence that amount: the arrangements for the distribution of grant announced on 18 October are dynamic and not static. So if a higher volume of cases is completed in an area through improvements in efficiency and court management, the proportion of total grant available for that area will increase. This might enable the committee to maintain a courthouse which would otherwise be at risk of closure. The more that courthouses are productively used, the stronger the case for their retention.

The Justices of the Peace Act 1979 provides for a paying authority to appeal to the Secretary of State if it opposes a committee's decision to close a courthouse. All such appeals are considered on the individual merits of the case and in the light of all relevant local circumstances. In addition to looking carefully at details of the grounds for the appeal, we look specifically at the long-term savings to be made, both in terms of running costs, whether they are realisable, as well as the cost of repairs and refurbishment that would otherwise have been met from capital grant; the cost penalties, particularly travelling costs, that would arise for all categories of court users; and the accessibility of alternative courthouses, particularly by public transport.

As will be clear from the Home Secretary's recent reply on the future organisation of the service—20 December 1991, Official Report, columns 250-51—the Government are fully committed to the principle that the magistrates courts are a quality local service, serving local communities. Since 1979 the Home Office has authorised building projects which provide 402 courtrooms at a total cost of about £350 million; over the next five years we expect to see a further 155 new courtrooms. Resources are, of course, limited; but it is important that there should be a network of courts, so that court users do not face unreasonable travelling difficulties and that the principle that magistrates are drawn from local communities is not weakened. But how these objectives are best met is a matter initially for local judgment.

Security Service (Access to Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce proposals for legislation to allow an independent person, with the relevant security clearance, to access on behalf of a citizen the personal information held by the security service in order to assess whether the information is relevant for the purpose of national security and, if appropriate, to make representations to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the Security Service Act 1989 which established the Security Service Tribunal. The tribunal investigates complaints about the service from members of the public. If the tribunal finds that a complainant has been the subject of inquiries by the service it is required to investigate whether the service had reasonable grounds for instituting or continuing inquiries about the complainant in the discharge of its functions. If the tribunal determines that the service did not have reasonable grounds for instituting or continuing inquiries, it is required to notify the complainant that it has made a determination in his favour, and to make a report of its findings to the Secretary of State and to the Security Service Commissioner. In such circumstances, the tribunal may also order inquiries by the service about the complainant to be ended and any records relating to such inquiries to be destroyed, and they may direct the Secretary of State to pay compensation to the complainant.

Sound Advantage

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received about the Royal National Institute for the Deaf's subsidiary Sound Advantage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Secretary has not received any representations. This is primarily a matter for the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales. I understand from the Charity Commissioners that they have received some representations and that they have met with the Royal National Institute for the Deaf to discuss the charity's relationship with Sound Advantage, a commercial company which is not part of the institute.

Crime Costs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated total cost of crime per annum.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 6 February 1992]: No reliable estimate of the total cost of crime is available. The report of the working group on the cost of crime in 1988—available in the Library of the House—gives various costs of different aspects of crime but states that these costs overlap and cannot be added to make a total. A recent CBI-Crime Concern report estimated the costs of crime to business to be around £10 billion per year: any realistic assessment of the total costs of crime generally would have to take into account the personal and social damage which it causes.

PRIME MINISTER

Clearance Procedures

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 3 December 1991, Official Report, column 94, whether those employed in executive agencies are also required to seek clearance before taking up posts with outside organisations and companies; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes, where appropriate.

Iraq (United Nations Inspections)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government received the appeal from the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency for supplementary funds to continue the United Nations special commission on inspection in Iraq; and what response was made to the appeal.

The Prime Minister: No appeal has been received.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to halt the geographical proliferation of nuclear weapons by nuclear-armed states to their military allies.

The Prime Minister: As a depositary power for the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons—NPT—the United Kingdom has consistently worked to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to encourage other states to accede to and abide by the treaty.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the actions taken by Her Majesty's Government to support and strengthen each article, respectively, of the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: The information is not centrally recorded and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. In our role as a depositary power for the treaty, the United Kingdom has strongly supported the NPT since its inception, and has been consistently active to this end.

South Africa

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy in regard to South Africa on (a) the need for transitional arrangements for the Government during the negotiating process, (b) the continued detention of political prisoners, (c) the implementation of the national peace accord, (d) the introduction of regulations banning the carrying of weapons at political rallies and (e) the proposal to give the white electorate a veto through a referendum on any agreement reached at the convention for a democratic South Africa.

The Prime Minister: I welcome the negotiations which are taking place within the Convention for a Democratic South Africa-CODESA. I have discussed them with President de Klerk and Mr. Mandela in meetings this month. It is for the South African people to decide on constitutional issues and any transitional arrangements.

We have urged the release of all political prisoners throughout South Africa: more than 1,000 political prisoners were released last year.

I welcomed the national peace accord when it was signed last year. Since then I have urged all parties to work for its implementation.

I welcome all measures designed to reduce the risk of violence.

The South African Government have proposed a referendum to obtain the views of all South Africans. The procedure for this is a matter for discussion in CODESA.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he has given to the National party proposals published on 5 September 1991 on constitutional change in South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I welcome the National party's intention to negotiate a democratic constitution which is non-racial and based on universal suffrage. These issues are being discussed in the Convention for a Democratic South Africa.

President de Klerk

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his meeting with President de Klerk on 1 February.

The Prime Minister: I met President de Klerk on 2 February. We discussed the constitutional talks in South Africa. The President expressed his determination to see them through to a new constitution. On township violence, President de Klerk said that national peace accord measures were in place and beginning to prove effective. The Goldstone commission was examining allegations against the South African defence force. The President explained the progress made in integration in sport, and said that unification of control of rugby should be concluded by late March. We agreed to keep up our dialogue.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Prime Minister who will represent Britain at the meeting to be held between the European Commission and the member Community states on a draft Council directive on dietary supplements.

The Prime Minister: The meeting to which the hon. Member refers will be attended by officials from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health. I should add that no Council directive on dietary supplements has yet been drafted: the meeting is to examine a Commission discussion paper.

Pay Review Bodies

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the latest reports of the pay review bodies.

The Prime Minister: In 1992 reports of the review bodies on the pay of the doctors and dentists, the professions allied to medicine, nursing staff, midwives and health visitors, the armed forces and school teachers have been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office. The Government are grateful to the members of the review bodies for the time and care which they have put into the preparation of the reports.

The following table shows the increases recommended by the review bodies for each group, and their cost.

Review body	Pay bill increase 1992-93[1] per cent.	Range of increases per cent.	Public expenditure cost £ million
Doctors and dentists (DDRB)[2]	6·0	5·5–8·5	[3]314
Nurses and allied professions (NAPRB)[2]
—nurses and midwives	5·8	5·6–6·0	[3]435
—professions allied to medicine (PAMs)	6·3	6·2–6·5	[3]48
Armed forces (AFRB)[4]	5·9	5·9–7·9	274
Schoolteachers (STRB)[5]	7·8	7·5	765

[1] Percentages by which the awards would increase the estimated 1992-93 pay bill.

[2] Great Britain. Northern Ireland health service pay normally follows Great Britain but is described separately.

[3] Includes cost of staff in NHS Trusts.

[4] United Kingdom.

[5] England and Wales. Scotland and Northern Ireland have separate pay regimes for school teachers.

The Government accept these recommendations and propose to pay them in full from 1 April 1992. The cost of implementing them will be met from within the public expenditure planning totals published in the autumn statement.

The Government recognise that the cost of the health service awards could not be met in full from present health service provision without adversely affecting services to patients. The Government will therefore provide an extra £149 million from the reserve for next year. The Government also accept that local education authorities would have difficulty in absorbing the full cost of the teachers' pay award, and have therefore decided to finance from the reserve an additional £60 million of grant to local authorities. The cost for the armed forces will be absorbed within the defence budget.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Wood (Fuel Use)

44. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what strategic plans there are to assist moves towards the diminution of the amount of wood used as a fuel in the third world and rain forest countries, and to address the consequences of such wood use on the top soil.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Many developing countries have national plans for the energy sector, which are drawn up and implemented with external assistance. These plans typically involve a range of fuels, including wood, which, when it comes from sustainably managed sources, can play a valuable role in meeting energy needs.

Pakistan

45. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current amount of aid given to Pakistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1990, the last year for which full figures are available, Britain's gross bilateral aid amounted to £47·6 million. The ODA provided £34·6 million.

India

46. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received over the effectiveness of United Kingdom financial aid to India's economic reform programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Indian Prime Minister and Finance Minister thanked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State during his recent visit to India for British support of their economic reforms, and for the £30 million of additional aid provided this year.

Non-governmental Development Organisations

47. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has met representatives of non-governmental development organisations during the last month to discuss their role in aid matters.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the last four weeks my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has met voluntary agencies on five occasions. I have had two such meetings.

Overseas Aid

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in rank order the donor nations of the United Nations showing the proportion of gross national product donated to overseas aid for the most recent year available, and the cash figures in sterling.

Mrs. Chalker: The latest information is as follows:

Official development assistance by United Nations member countries in 1990 in oda/GNP percentage order

Country	Amount £ million	Per cent. of GNP 1990
Saudi Arabia	2,079	3·89
Norway	678	1·17
Netherlands	1,459	0·94
Denmark	659	0·93

Developing Countries

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the total ODA budget, bilateral and multilateral, for 1991-92 has been committed for direct support for good government in developing countries; what is the level of funding; and in which countries Her Majesty's Government are supporting such projects.

Mrs. Chalker: We plan to spend around £30 million of bilateral aid[1] this year in direct support of "good government" activities. This is 3 per cent. of total bilateral aid. Countries in which we are funding such projects include:

Egypt
Ethiopia

Gambia
Ghana
Guinea
Kenya
Malawi
Mauritius
Mozambique
Namibia
Nigeria
Uganda
Zambia
Zimbabwe
Bangladesh
India
Malaysia
Maldives
Nepal
Pakistan
Philippines
Sri Lanka
Dominica
Grenada
Guyana
Jamaica
Montserrat
St. Kitts
St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Turks and Caicos
Eastern Caribbean
Mexico
Senegal
Seychelles
Sierra Leone
South Africa
Swaziland
Tanzania
St. Helena
Anguilla
Antigua
Barbados
Belize
British Virgin Islands
Fiji
Kiribati
Solomon Islands
Tonga
Tuvalu
Vanuatu

We also plan to provide in excess of £140 million—14 per cent. of total bilateral aid—this year for balance of payments support to countries implementing IMF-approved economic reform programmes, which also fall within "good government".

[1] The data required to assess our multilateral aid expenditure on good government projects this year are not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Audit Committees

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received since 1988, and from whom, opposing the need for a statutory requirement for companies to have audit committees.

Mr. Redwood: None. Those opposed to a statutory requirement for companies to have audit committees had no call to make representations since the Government have not made proposals to introduce such a requirement.

Company Directors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to bring forward legislation to increase the powers and resources of independent company directors.

Mr. Redwood: No. I would encourage companies to have high-calibre non-executive directors and to give all their directors adequate powers and resources. How this is done is best left to individual companies. All directors, in fulfilling their responsibilities, should exercise their judgment independently.

Company Voting Procedures

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the proxy system of voting exercised at company annual general meetings.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Departmental Computers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how long each computerised system in his Department would take to return to full operation in the event of a disaster.

Mr. Leigh: The Department's IT security policy requires that, for each IT system, appropriate measures are adopted to maintain availability. Measures are determined by means of risk analysis and include disaster recovery plans. Such plans will take into account the time-critical nature of the system, the various types of disaster—say, from loss of stored data to loss of a building—and the costs and impact of loss of service. Such planning provides a mechanism for dealing with different types of loss of service in a cost-effective manner. System recovery times following a disaster will vary in accordance with the size of the system, the recovery requirements established and the type and magnitude of any disaster that might occur.

Executive Agencies

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will arrange to place in the Library the business plans of the executive agencies which come within his Department's responsibilities.

Mr. Leigh: I am arranging for copies of the current corporate plans to be placed in the Library for Accounts Branch—now Accounts Services Agency—and for the Patent Office executive agency, together with the summary corporate plan for Companies House executive agency.

In cases where commercial confidentiality, or the need to protect other sensitive information means it is not possible to make an agency's corporate plan public, information about its corporate strategy should be available from the annual report. In addition to the statutory reports required to be laid before Parliament, I am arranging for copies of the most recent annual reports to be placed in the Library for the following agencies:

Insolvency Service Executive Agency.
Laboratory of the Government Chemist Executive Agency.
National Engineering Laboratory Executive Agency.
National Physical Laboratory Executive Agency.
National Weights and Measures Laboratory Executive Agency.

Radiocommunications Executive Agency.
Warren Spring Laboratory Executive Agency.

EC (Aid Distribution)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline the differences between the proposals by the European Commission for the distribution of regional and other aids and the practice of the United Kingdom Government; and what proposals the Commission has for public authorities and other bodies to make direct application to Brussels for such aid or grants.

Mr. Leigh: The Commission has suggested that the allocation of Community structural funds should be completely separated from other central Government allocations in the United Kingdom public expenditure system.

The Government believe that expenditure financed by the funds should be approved by Parliament. The funds therefore feature in the supply estimates of relevant Departments.

As regards the possibility of public authorities and other bodies making direct application to Brussels for grants, the Commission has made no such proposals formally. Article 14(1) of Council regulation (EEC) 4253/88 requires applications to be submitted by the member state concerned or by any body it may designate to do so. As it is not expected that the increase in the appropriations for the Funds will lead to any increase in the United Kingdom's receipts from them, the Government believes that Article 9 has no practical impact on the United Kingdom.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline the nature of the changes agreed by the EC on the distribution of regional grants in 1988, and the impact these changes have for the established practices of the United Kingdom Government on the distribution of such grants.

Mr. Leigh: Article 9 of Council regulation (EEC) 4253/88 provides that

> "In establishing and implementing the Community support frameworks, the Commission and the Member States shall ensure that the increase in the appropriations for the Funds provided for in Article 12(2) of Regulation (EEC) No. 2052/88 has a genuine additional economic impact in the regions concerned and results in at least an equivalent increase in the total volume of official or similar (Community and national) structural aid in the Member State concerned, taking account of the macro-economic circumstances in which the funding takes place."

Article 12(2) of Council regulation (EEC) 2052/88 states, inter alia, that

> "Commitment appropriations for the Structural Funds shall be doubled in real terms in 1993 by comparison with 1987."

As it is not expected that the increase in the appropriations for the funds will lead to any increase in the United Kingdom's receipts from them, the Government believe that article 9 has no practical impact on the United Kingdom.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the sums allocated by the EC for regional aid to the United Kingdom is spent only for that purpose.

Mr. Leigh: Yes.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much aid from the EC is being delayed on account of the procedural issues raised by the EC Commission; and if Her Majesty's Government will delay comparable amounts in their payments to the EC.

Mr. Leigh: (a) Approximately £135 million; (b) No.

Foreign Telecommunications Companies

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from foreign telecommunications companies that wish to commence business in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: The Government's pro-competitive telecommunications policy has already led to major overseas investment in the United Kingdom, most notably with a projected £5 billion commitment by cable television companies. Of the 24 applications for licences to run telecommunications systems since the duopoly review, 12 are from foreign companies or companies with a significant foreign shareholding. A further 30 firms, both British and foreign owned, have expressed an interest in applying for a licence. I welcome the investment and jobs that will be created by foreign companies and the wide range of innovative services they plan to offer. This further confirms that the United Kingdom is the preferred location in Europe for inward investment in telecommunications.

Home Income Investment

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Organisation and other regulatory bodies on the subject of home income investment bond schemes and related debt incurred by older people.

Mr. Redwood: I have encouraged the Securities and Investments Board to take the lead in ensuring that everything possible is done to help clients who were sold unsuitable schemes, and to prevent such difficulties in the future.

Home Income Investment Bonds

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the losses incurred by pensioners taking out home income investment bond schemes.

Mr. Redwood: I have received a number of representations on this subject, which I have referred to the appropriate regulatory bodies.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress towards agreement on the proposed European directive on data protection and telecommunications.

Mr. Redwood: Member states have given initial views on the directive in a working group of the Council, though detailed discussions have to date been delayed pending consideration of the draft general directive on data protection. The European Parliament's opinion on the directive is expected shortly.

Eureka

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to implement the agreements on Eureka worked out at Helsinki in 1991.

Mr. Leigh: The United Kingdom is actively involved in the Eureka high-level group, which is responsible for the implementation of the agreements worked out at The Hague in 1991. Current major issues under discussion are the new medium-term plan, strategic projects, interaction between EC research and development and Eureka, and new members. My noble Friend the Under Secretary of State for Industry and Technology and other European Ministers will review the progress made at the Finnish ministerial conference, which will be held in Tampere, Finland in May 1992.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to involve small firms in the Eureka project.

Mr. Leigh: Participation in Eureka projects is a matter for individual companies, but the DTI offers preferential rates of funding to small firms and is constantly improving the flow of information to enable them to consider the Eureka option.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he is having with the CBI on framework programmes for Eureka.

Mr. Leigh: My Department maintains good contacts with the CBI on European R and D issues. Over recent months, senior departmental officials have been involved in discussions with the CBI on the EC's framework programme for R and D—for example at the round-table meeting organised by the CBI in September of last year.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what help he is giving to British Industry by providing case studies on Eureka.

Mr. Leigh: Twelve case studies have just been published to illustrate the benefits of Eureka collaboration to potential project participants in the United Kingdom. The case studies will be primarily targeted at United Kingdom industry to enable them to consider the Eureka mechanism in developing their own European and world market strategies.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he is providing to British firms about potential partners across Europe for Eureka projects.

Mr. Leigh: The main promotional tool for Eureka in the United Kingdom is the Eureka handbook which is produced by the DTI's Eureka unit. The handbook contains details of the Eureka database in Brussels, which can be used as a contact mechanism for potential partners, and of DTI feasibility studies which can be used for partner search activities.

Also, through the use of consultancies, the DTI provides information to United Kingdom industry on Eureka in general as well as details of European partnering and marriage broking events in Europe aimed at generating Eureka projects.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what encouragement he is giving to British industry to back large strategic projects in relation to Eureka.

Mr. Leigh: In some cases, the DTI actively encourages United Kingdom industry to participate in large strategic projects by holding workshops, and launching targeted consultancy activities and mailshots. More generally, the DTI's Eureka unit is constantly improving the flow of information to United Kingdom firms to enable them to consider the possible role of the Eureka mechanism in developing their own European and world market strategies.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what help he is giving to British industry in clarifying the start-up procedures for the Eureka project.

Mr. Leigh: The Eureka unit has produced a handbook, which details how Eureka works and summarises the process of seeking Eureka status and Government support for a project. Information on Eureka and copies of the handbook are available from the Eureka inquiry point.

Staff in the Eureka unit regularly give presentations to industry covering the start-up processes in detail, while project officers from DTI line divisions give advice to companies on the specifics of Government grants when sought.

Line divisions also run consultancies in their own areas of policy responsibility. This activity disseminates information on Eureka to companies having no prior knowledge of the Eureka initiative, in order to help them participate in new Eureka projects.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration he is giving to the conditions for the withdrawal of the Eureka grant if a project does not perform well over a period of years.

Mr. Leigh: The assistance the Department gives to Eureka projects is governed by standard conditions.

While the Department, in supporting projects, recognises the inherent financial and technical risks involved in pan-European collaboration, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may, under the terms of the Department's offer letter, terminate payment of grant, and, if appropriate, reclaim grant already paid, if certain specified conditions are not met.

Circumstances that might trigger withdrawal of grant include:

(i) that the future of the project is in jeopardy;
(ii) that in the opinion of the Secretary of State progress towards completion of the project is unsatisfactory.

Instances of withdrawal of Eureka grant are rare.

The matter of funding for United Kingdom firms participating in Eureka projects is quite distinct from the issue of Eureka status for projects. Introducing a mechanism for withdrawal of such status from projects which do not perform as expected, was one recommendation of the international Eureka assessment panel which reported last year; it is being pursued in the high-level group of representatives from Eureka countries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to help management resources in small companies bidding to participate in European and Eureka projects.

Mr. Leigh: There are no immediate plans to give additional help to small companies in this way.

The DTI's enterprise initiative currently offers consultancy advice to small companies on making better use of technology, and advice on participation in Eureka projects is always readily available from the Eureka unit, DTI line divisions and regional offices.

Financially, small and medium-sized companies may be eligible for 50 per cent. funding for a pre-Eureka feasibility study. In recognition of the higher technical and commercial risks associated with European collaboration, the United Kingdom Government can offer a higher overall grant rate to small and medium-sized enterprises for participation in a Eureka project.

Intermediate Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the percentage difference in the volume of imports of intermediate goods recorded in December 1991, compared to December 1985; and what assessment he has made of the factors which led to this change.

Mr. Redwood: The volume of imports of intermediate goods increased by 63 per cent. between the fourth quarters of 1985 and 1991. The change is due to decisions by United Kingdom industry to import goods at the later stage of manufacture, in order to obtain the best value for money and thereby maintain competitiveness.

Interest-free Credit

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what concerns have been expressed to his Department in relation to the advertising of interest-free credit; how many complaints about the advertising of interest-free credit have been received by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 4 February 1992]: The National Consumer Council and the Consumers Association are concerned that advertisements for interest-free credit should include information about repayments. In the last year there have been no complaints about such advertisements. I shall give careful consideration to the views on interest-free credit which have been expressed in reply to the consultation document "Revised Proposals on Credit Marketing".

Photocopiers and Fax Machines

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in improving the rights of lessees of photocopiers and fax machines by amending the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 7 February 1992]: A number of possible amendments to the Consumer Credit Act are being examined. However, no decisions have been taken. If it should be decided to amend the Act, implementation of that decision would have to await parliamentary time for primary legislation.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to reply to the letter sent to him on 10 January 1991 by the information secretary of the National Federation of Retail Newsagents concerning alleged misrepresentation by salesmen of fax machines and photocopiers.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 7 February 1992]: A reply was sent on 4 February.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Earnings Disregards

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the additional annual cost to the Exchequer of paying benefits while applying an earnings disregard for (i) child care costs, (ii) fares to work and (iii) other reasonable expenses connected with work.

Mr. Jack: In the absence of specific assumptions about the size of such disregards, information is not available to make a reliable estimate of the costs involved. However, the estimated additional annual cost of increasing earnings disregards by £1 per week for all claimants in income support, community charge benefit, housing benefit and family credit is around £25 million in total at 1991-92 prices and benefit levels.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1986-88 family expenditure surveys and the 1990 annual statistical inquiry.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether pensioner couples aged 60 to 74 years who are not entitled to income support since the April 1991 pension uprating will be entitled to cold weather payments for the current winter.

Mr. Scott: No. To qualify for a cold weather payment a pensioner must be getting income support with the pensioner premium.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, following the social security commissioners' decision CA/380/90, what are his plans to identify children who were under the age of two before April 1990 and refused attendance allowance under the pre-1990 law.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so. Children who were refused attendance allowance on age grounds cannot benefit from the commissioners' decision. This is because legislation prevents the payment of arrears where claims have been adjudicated upon and a review is then sought following a reinterpretation of the law.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations have been received to date concerning payment of attendance allowance for a child under two in the period before April 1990.

Mr. Scott: We have received a number of representations on individual cases, to which we are replying.

Maternity Payments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are claiming maternity payment as a proportion of the people who are eligible for this payment.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The data information systems in use in the Department are detailed in the Information Technology Services Agency's annual business plan 1991-92 and reported on in the agency's annual report 1990-91 both of which have been placed in the Library. All the systems are registered under, and fully comply with, the Data Protection Act which compels the listing of all those to whom data might be provided.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he expects the Department's annual report to be available to hon. Members in the Vote Office.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 30 January at columns 634-35.

Home Visits

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give (a) the total number of home visits to claimants, (b) the total mileage covered in carrying out those visits and (c) the total travel expenses paid out for home visits by staff at the Maryhill road, Atlas road and Pitt street, Glasgow Department of Social Security offices, respectively, in each year from 1979 to 1991; and also give the total number of (i) staff employed, (ii) benefit claimants interviewed and (iii) benefit claimants serviced at those offices in those years.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefit Payments (Delays)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement explaining in full the action which was taken by (a) his private office and (b) his Department following the inquiry made in December on behalf of the hon. Member for Macclesfield in connection with the delay in the payment of benefits to Mr. Manning of 3 Renfrew close, Macclesfield.

Mr. Scott: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement explaining the assistance to which Mr. Manning of 3 Renfrew close, Macclesfield is entitled in connection with his increased responsibilities and commitments in providing a home for his two nephews; and if he will set out the reasons why no payments have yet been made in this respect to Mr. Manning.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefit payments is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend shortly and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Orphans

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the assistance which is available from his Department to assist young orphans with the cost of the provision of the funerals of their parents.

Mr. Scott: An adult who receives income support, family credit, housing benefit or community charge benefit, and who is responsible for arranging a funeral, will be entitled to a funeral payment from the social fund. A young orphan would not be entitled in his own right because he could not receive any of the qualifying benefits.

Social Fund

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the budget loan awarded and (b) the crisis loan awarded under the social fund for the year 1990-91 and the first six months of 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: Information on budget and crisis loan awards for 1990-91 and the first six months of 1991-92 is in the Library.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants applied for grants or loans under the social fund during the financial year 1990-91 and the first six months of 1991-92 in each of the benefit offices in North Tees and South Tees area;

(2) how many claimants were refused grants or loans under the social fund during the financial year 1990-91 and the first six months of 1991-92 in each of the benefit offices in North Tees and South Tees; and for what reason;

(3) under the social fund, what was the average size of the grant awarded for the year 1990-91 and the first six months of 1991-92 in each of the benefit offices in North Tees and South Tees area.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Teesside Benefit Areas

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the current targets for the North Tees and South Tees benefit areas are for meeting (a) delivery and (b) accuracy for benefits administered.

Miss Widdecombe: The setting of targets for district offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Severe Hardship Allowance

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many severe hardship allowance payments were made to young people for the year 1990-91 (a) in the North and (b) in South Tees benefit area; and how many have been made in the first six months of 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the figures (a) by region and (b) nationally for each year from 1987 onwards of the number of people applying for (i) mobility allowances and (ii) attendance allowances; and the actual numbers granted in each case.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1992, c. 467-68]: I regret that the figure for 1991 was incorrect. The correct information is as follows:

Regional figures are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Available national figures are given in the table:

	AA initial and subsequent claims[1] (rounded thousands)		MobA initial and subsequent claims[1] (rounded thousands)
Year	Number received	Awards	Number received	Awards
1987	320	209	182	92
1988	362	208	200	92
1989	365	229	200	93
1990	409	274	198	130
1991	539	348	231	109

[1] Claims received in any year are not necessarily processed in that same year. Figures for renewals are not included.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East Timor

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss the resolution of the United Nations Security Council and General Assembly calling on Indonesia to withdraw from East Timor with the Indonesian Foreign Minister at his meeting in London on 5 February.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs made clear to the Indonesian Foreign Minister that we continue to support the United Nations Secretary-General in his efforts to promote contacts between Indonesia and Portugal to reach a settlement satisfactory to both sides, as called for in a United Nations General Assembly resolution of 1982.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In common with many other Departments, the business of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is increasingly conducted with the use of data information systems. It would not be possible to document them fully other than at a disproportionate cost. Systems are registered under the terms of the Data Protection Act, under which the FCO has eight registrations, at present encompassing 1,194 applications. None of these is linked to the police national computer, or to other external systems.

Aung San Suu Kyi

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the case of Aung San Suu Kyi in Burma.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We deplore the continuing failure of the Burmese authorities to respond to our own and other international calls for the release of Aung San Suu Kyi, including the United Nations General Assembly resolution on human rights in Burma which we co-sponsored and which drew attention to her plight. With our EC partners we have called on the Burmese authorities to allow Aung San Suu Kyi access to her family and to permit her to receive proper medical attention. We have urged other countries to make similar approaches to the regime in Burma.

Albanians, Kosovo

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to monitor how recognition of Slovenia and Croatia may alter the prospects for ethnic Albanians in Kosovo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We will continue to monitor closely the situation in Yugoslavia and the impact which recognition of Slovenia and Croatia has had there.

Arms Sales (Definition)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his proposed definition of arms for the purposes of the establishment of an arms sales register as required by United Nations resolution will cover (a) the sales of designs, technology and project management expertise, (b) military end-users of dual-use machine tools, and electronic equipment, (c) radar, communications and energy option equipment and (d) bunkers, testing facilities and target-hardening equipment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, on 12 December 1991, at column 499.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries over which Her Majesty's Government have concern arising from the buildup of fissile nuclear materials capable of being diverted to military use in nuclear warheads.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any country failing to accede to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons or to other similar nuclear non-proliferation agreements involving the safeguarding of all their fissile nuclear materials must expect to be viewed with some concern.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones [pursuant to his answer, 5 February 1992, c. 199]: The Foreign Affairs Council met on 3 February and a statement on its outcome was made on 7 February.

The Economic and Financial Council will meet on 10 February. Ministers will consider multilateral surveillance of the economies of member states, including the Irish convergence programme, and also the formal adoption of the Commission's annual economic report. The Council will also consider aid to central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. The Council may also consider the revision to the financial perspective for 1992, the investment services directive and the legislative programme relating to economic and monetary union arising from the treaty on European union. Ministers may also formally adopt the legal text of the draft directive on the commercial movement of excise goods in the single market which they agreed at the Economic and Finance Council on 16 December 1991. It is also expected that Ministers will formally adopt a new regulation for enhanced administrative cooperation between member states. This will provide for the automatic exchange of information between EC tax authorities.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 10 and 11 February. Ministers will discuss reform on the common agricultural policy, agricultural aspects of the GATT Uruguay round, public health problems affecting the killing of wild game and the marketing of wild game meat.

The internal market council will meet on 25 February. Ministers may consider the final adoption of the public procurement directive for remedies in the utilities sectors, and the adoption of common positions on the third non-life insurance directive. Consolidation directives on tractors and on units of measurement, and a directive on veterinary homeopathic medicines will also be discussed by Ministers. There may also be further ministerial discussions on frontier controls, and draft legislation on data protection, precursor chemicals, food colourings and food irradiation.

TRANSPORT

Light Dues

12. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to abolish the system of light dues.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have no plans to abolish the system of light dues.

British Rail

13. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to publish proposals for the privatisation of British Rail.

19. Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to publish his White Paper on the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Rifkind: We are making very good progress in developing our proposals to expand the use of the railways through the ending of the rail monopoly and involving the private sector in providing rail services.

22. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to improve the commercial responsiveness of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: Privatisation will improve the commercial responsiveness of British Rail. Meanwhile, the passengers charter, BR's response to the citizens charter, which will be published later this month, will signal a better deal for rail users.

Greenford-Paddington Line

14. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss investment in a direct line from Greenford to Paddington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend and I meet the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss current issues. Substantial investment in the Greenford to Paddington corridor is planned over the next few years as part of the total modernisation of Network SouthEast's Thames line.

Network SouthEast

15. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the running of Network SouthEast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend and I meet the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss current issues.

Lorries (Lateral Spray)

16. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by his Department on identifying the cause of lateral spray from large lorries and other heavy vehicles during wet conditions on motorways; and what means he has identified to reduce such spray.

Mr. Chope: Research at the Transport and Road Research Laboratory into quantifying the danger caused by loss of vision as a result of spray is continuing. A new EC directive at a slightly higher standard than, and operating as an alternative to, the existing national regulations will come into force from April 1992. I hope that a revised British standard, reflecting the improvements in the directive, will be available by the middle of this year so it can then be incorporated in national regulations.

Blight Notice Regulations

17. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the scope of the blight notice regulations.

Mr. Chope: I announced on 17 January the rules which will govern the exercise of the additional discretionary powers conferred by section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

A11

18. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the dualling of the A11 between Newmarket and Four Wentways to be completed.

Mr. Chope: Tenders for the work were received on 4 February. Assessment, award of contract and mobilisation of the successful contractor normally take about two months. The period for completion in the tender documents is two years, which means the road would be dualled by spring 1993.

Citizens Charter

20. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what redress under the citizens charter he proposes to make available to passengers on public transport.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail and London Underground are to publish their customer charters shortly. Both charters will introduce new systems of redress.

A5

21. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has plans to upgrade the A5 from Hinckley—M69/A5 junction—to Nuneaton—A47/A5.

Mr. Chope: No schemes are currently included in the roads programme to upgrade this section of the A5.

A scheme identification study has been carried out to examine the length of the A5 between Old Sleaford, Bucks and the M42, to identify viable options for improving this route. The study report is now being evaluated. Any suitable schemes arising from this will be considered for inclusion in the roads programme when it is next reviewed.

Fenchurch Street Line

23. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what priority is now being given to improving rail services on the Fenchurch Street line.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is treating plans for modernisation of the Fenchurch Street line as a matter of high priority. It will shortly let a contract for the £50 resignalling programme which should be completed during 1995. British Rail sees this as the key to improving services. British Rail's rolling stock proposals are currently under discussion with the Department.

Motorist Courtesy Campaign

24. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a motorist courtesy campaign, including television and cinema advertising, to enforce respect for the rights of pedestrians, cyclists and other road users.

Mr. Chope: As part of our wider policy initiatives to improve the safety of vulnerable road users we are currently running a series of campaigns to make motorists more aware of their responsibility for the safety of others, particularly children. These campaigns focus on the need to slow down in residential areas, where inappropriate speed is a major contributory cause of accidents.

Midland Line

25. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent meetings he has had with local authorities to discuss electrification of the midland line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I met representatives of the midland main line consortium of local authorities on 4 November. I understand that the consortium has commissioned consultants to examine the case for electrification of the line. Their final report is awaited. It would be for British Rail to bring forward an investment submission if it believed that the project deserves priority within the resources available to it.

Docklands Light Railway

26. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects the Beckton extension of the docklands light railway to be opened for passenger traffic.

Mr. Freeman: Good progress has been made so far on the construction of the Beckton extension. However, the exact date of the opening of the passenger service will be dependent upon the satisfactory commissioning and clear demonstration of reliability of the new signalling system. An announcement will be made by the DLR as soon as a firm date is known.

Alternative Rail Services

27. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with possible providers of alternative rail services.

Mr. Freeman: A number of private companies have expressed interest in providing rail services, including Virgin, Stagecoach, Badgerline, National Power, Hunslet Barclay and others. This is very encouraging evidence of the opportunities which exist for private sector participation in the passenger and freight railway.

Roads (North-East England)

28. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the Government have spent on road construction and maintenance in the north-east of England since 1979; how much the Government plan to spend in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Since 1979 the Government have spent some £412 million in cash terms on road construction and maintenance of trunk roads and the motorways in the north-east of England.

Additionally over the last six years the Department has provided transport supplementary grant for local authority road schemes amounting to some £73 million.

The total provision for 1992-93 has not yet been decided.

London Underground (Disabled People)

29. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what survey has been made of the access available for disabled people to travel on London underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The unit for disabled passengers at London Transport works closely with London Underground Ltd.—LUL—and representatives of people with disabilities on improvements in access to the underground system. A guide is produced by the unit which gives information on access at all stations.

LUL has also recently commissioned a report on safety aspects of wheelchair users travelling in deep sections of the system, and that report is currently under discussion with the railway inspectorate.

Rail Services (Swansea)

30. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to provide further funding for rail services to and from Swansea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is for British Rail to determine future investment priorities within the funds available. Any investment in the south Wales line would have to be considered in the light of investment needs elsewhere on the network, as well as the merits of the actual case.

Agricultural Vehicles

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to rationalise the handling of European type approval applications for agricultural vehicles.

Mr. Chope: In order to reduce the burden on manufacturers and to improve the efficiency of type approval procedures, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has approved the transfer of responsibility for agricultural vehicle type approval matters from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to the Department of Transport. Subject to parliamentary approval, the relevant regulations will be amended to bring this into effect from 10 February 1992.

River Safety Inquiry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that adequate resources for legal advice and assistance are available to those seeking to make representations or give evidence to the inquiry set up into river safety.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has asked Mr. John Hayes, secretary general of the Law Society, to carry out an independent investigation into river safety. Mr. Hayes has already asked for written representations, through advertisements in the press and letters to those with a known interest. I understand that he also intends inviting some individuals to discuss their evidence with him. These discussions will be totally non-adversarial and held in private. In the circumstances I do not think that those who choose to give evidence should have any need of legal advice and I do not propose to use public funds to meet any costs they might incur.

Coastguard

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the effects of the proposed changes in coastguard service provision on the ability of auxiliary staff to provide an effective service.

Mr. McLoughlin: The sector review provided inter alia an in-depth assessment of the ability of the auxiliary coastguard service to provide an effective service. Proposals put forward as a result aim further to improve this ability, including the establishment of 68 additional auxiliary coastguard companies around the coast at locations where there previously were none; by doubling numbers of pagers and portable radios; by improving remuneration, equipment, and training of auxiliaries; and by way of an extensive station building and upgrading programme to provide the coastguard with modern bases from which to operate.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a breakdown by United Kingdom county and region of the finance being allocated for the implementation of the proposed changes in coastguard provision; and how much of this will be offset by planned disposals.

Mr. McLoughlin: The internal structure of the coastguard service is not organised along United Kingdom county/regional boundaries. The financial allocation for the whole of the United Kingdom for the implementation period of the sector review is in the region of £1,430,000. I would refer the hon. Member to an earlier reply I gave him concerning the disposal of assets, where I stated that no significant income is expected, and that annual running cost savings of over £50,000 will be achieved once the programme of disposals is complete.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from members of the public expressing dissatisfaction with the effectiveness of the coastguard service in responding quickly to reported incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Secretary of State for Transport has received no representations from members of the public expressing dissatisfaction with the effectiveness of the coastguard service in responding quickly to reported incidents in the past year. Her Majesty's coastguard has received expressions of dissatisfaction over the handling of four incidents—out of over 7,200—in the past year.

Her Majesty's coastguard constantly seeks to improve availability, readiness and resources in order to provide the best possible search-and-rescue service in an efficient and cost-effective manner.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, columns 216-17, if he will specify the meetings, including dates, he has had with the representatives of coastguard auxiliary staff on the proposed changes to coastguard service provision.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Secretary of State for Transport has not had any meetings with representatives of the auxiliary coastguard concerning proposed changes resulting from the sector review. The coastguard management structure is in place to fulfil the Secretary of State's remit to provide a search-and-rescue organisation within the United Kingdom and auxiliary coastguards have formal access to this management to communicate their views, opinions and concerns.

The hon. Member will be aware that all auxiliary coastguard companies had ample opportunity to communicate their views and opinions on the sector review proposals to district and regional management before final regional implementation plans were submitted to coastguard headquarters.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from chief coastguards on the proposed changes in coastguard service provision; how many expressed (a) approval and (b) disapproval with the proposed changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Secretary of State has received no representations from regional controllers on the sector review. Regional controllers have had, apart from frequent written consultations and coastal visits by the chief coastguard, six meetings between January 1989 and May 1991 with the chief coastguard to discuss and formulate recommendations, and to put forward their local implementation plans. All expressed approval of the proposed changes.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he received from representatives of the auxiliary staff of the coastguard service on the review of the service; and how many indicated (a) approval and (b) disapproval.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Secretary of State has received no direct representation from representatives of the auxiliary staff of the coastguard service on the review of the service. Auxiliary coastguards were given ample opportunity to express their views and opinions concerning the sector review through local line management during the consultative period in 1991 before final regional implementation plans were submitted to coastguard headquarters.

The vast majority of auxiliary coastguards and regular officers are in favour of the review and its proposals. There are, exceptionally, a few localised areas where disapproval has been expressed.

A6M/A627 Junction, Stockport

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of the junction proposed for the A6M/A627 junction at Offerton road, Stockport, mentioned in his letter of 27 January to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove.

Mr. Chope: The junction proposals were published in November as part of the supplementary line and side roads orders.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has of the effects of the fitting of catalytic converters to vehicles in terms of noxious emissions, other emissions and fuel consumption.

Mr. Chope: On the basis of road tests carried out by the Government's Warren Spring laboratory, a typical vehicle equipped with a catalyst in good condition will reduce its emissions of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen by approximately 90 per cent. in each case. On the other hand, fuel consumption will increase by 3 to 9 per cent., and there will be an increase of 9 to 23 per cent. in carbon dioxide emissions.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will obtain confirmation from the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority that where smoke hood manufacturers can demonstrate that their smoke hoods meet the requirement of the internationally agreed EUROCAE standard for passenger protective breathing equipment they will be deemed to have satisfied the Civil Aviation Authority's requirement that their smoke hoods do not hinder escape.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am advised by the Civil Aviation Authority that the best strategies to protect passengers in an aircraft fire are rapid evacuation and prevention of the spread of fire. The CAA believes that smokehoods, whether to the EUROCAE standard or otherwise, are likely to give rise to an unacceptable delay in evacuation.

London Underground (Policing)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the manning levels of British Transport police on the Central line; and what arrangements there are for compensating shopkeepers for criminal damage to shops on London Transport premises.

Mr. Freeman: More than 160 officers are stationed at British Transport police stations in the geographical area covered by the Central line. The terms of leases between LT and its tenants are a commercial matter for the parties involved, but I understand that LT's normal practice is to advise shopkeepers to take out insurance against criminal damage.

Bypasses and Motorways

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) bypasses and (b) motorways have been constructed by his Department since 1972; and if he will list for each of those bypasses and motorways the estimated traffic flows (i) at the time of design, (ii) on completion, (iii) after the first year of operation and (iv) at present.

Mr. Chope: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The Department records traffic forecasts and actual traffic one year after opening for trunk road schemes for which orders have been published since 1981.

Traffic Accidents (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of traffic accidents (a) in total and (b) resulting in deaths, for each year since 1980 (i) in Leicestershire and (ii) on the distributor road network in Leicester.

Mr. Chope: The number of injury accidents, and the number of these which resulted in deaths, in Leicestershire and the A563 Leicester ring road, from 1980 to 1990, are given in the table.

Injury accidents in Leicestershire and on the A563 Leicester ring road: By severity: 1980-1990

Year	Leicestershire Fatal accidents	Leicestershire All injury accidents	A563 Fatal accidents	A563 All injury accidents
1980	102	3,708	0	0
1981	100	3,624	0	0
1982	95	3,634	0	0
1983	98	3,658	0	0
1984	80	3,847	0	0
1985	91	3,748	0	5
1986	93	3,334	1	67
1987	87	3,651	1	56
1988	85	3,706	1	64
1989	90	3,690	4	90
1990	93	3,782	2	103

The A563 has been opened in several stages since 1983. The upward trend in accidents is related to increases in road length and the amount of traffic using it.

Toll Bridges

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the figures for (a) annual income and cost and (b) capital debt outstanding, for toll bridges in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows.

The 1990-91 figures for the main toll bridges in England, for which accounts have been published, are as follows:

	Humber £ million	Itchen £ million	Severn £ million	Tamar £ million
1. Income (from toll)	10·7	2·0	20·8	2·7
2. Cost:
Operating expenses	1·7	0·6	8·6	2·3
Debt and other charges	43·4	1·0	19·0	0·0
Total expenditure	45·1	1·6	27·6	2·3
Outstanding debt at 31 March 1991	404·7	3·6	148·9	—

Notes:

1. Annual income from toll (excludes income from other sources).
2. Outstanding debt comprises original capital cost and accumulated debt charges.

English Channel

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the action his Department proposes to take as a result of the recent collision in the English channel off Ramsgate between the tanker Darya Kamal and the F3 Lanby buoy.

Mr. McLoughlin: The marine accident investigation branch—MAIB—obtained a written report from the master pertaining to the incident. The report was received on 30 January. After discussion with Trinity House, the MAIB decided that no further action needed to be taken.

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action his Department proposes to take in the light of recent collisions in the English channel to ensure that proper bridge watch keeping and manning levels exist on all ships using the English channel separation lanes inside or outside British territorial waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The English channel and the Dover strait are an international waterway and rights of innocent passage exist so that the United Kingdom has no powers to board these ships while in transit. Ship movements are continuously monitored to verify compliance with traffic separation schemes. Apparent contraventions of the collision regulations are followed up with a view to prosecution by the United Kingdom or flag state as appropriate. Manning levels are checked during port state control inspections and the inspectors are empowered to detain any vessel where the manning is deficient.

Government Grants

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what Government grants were awarded for (a) ferry services and (b) bridge projects in England listed by region for each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Grants amounting to £1·325 million have been made to the Merseyside passenger transport authority in respect of the Woodside ferry terminal; the last payment was in February 1990.

Many local authority road schemes which have been assisted by transport supplementary grant include overpasses underpasses, and bridges over railways, rivers, streams, canals, or other roads. Records are not kept as to which schemes include bridges or as to the proportion of scheme costs representing bridges.

No grants have been made by my Department since 1986-87 towards the provision or improvement of tolled road bridges.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Asthma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice is given to nursery, infant, primary and secondary schools concerning asthma sufferers and the proximity of schools and school playgrounds to major roads.

Mr. Fallon: Medical paediatric advice is available to schools and to LEAs from the district health authorities' community child health service. Individual children with asthma may be seen with their parents when advice may be given to the child and family, the teacher and the school with regard to management in a particular case.

The child's general medical practitioner who has responsibility for his or her medical care, or the hospital paediatrician in more severe cases, may also give advice not only to the child and family but to the teacher and school.

The proximity of a school and the school playground to major roads would be for local consideration by the school and the school doctor according to the state of health and asthma of an individual child or group of children.

Higher Education (Quality Audits)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he proposes to replace the quality audit and quality assurance work in higher education currently undertaken by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals' academic audit unit and the Council for National Academic Awards.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, the Committee of Directors of Polytechnics and the Standing Conference of Principals have submitted proposals to establish a new quality and access organisation. This would be responsible for monitoring institutions' quality control and validation arrangements, building on the work of the academic audit unit and the Council for National Academic Awards. It would also have a role in the promotion and dissemination of best practice, and would take on and develop the CNAA's functions in the areas of credit accumulation and transfer schemes and the recognition of access courses. Audit and other reports would be published. The steering council of the organisation would have industrial and professional, as well as academic, members. These proposals are in line with those in Cm 1541 and we have welcomed them in principle. I am expecting later this month a further report describing in greater detail how it is proposed that the new organisation would operate in practice.

Primary Education

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make available in the Vote Office copies of the report on primary education by Professor Alexander, Mr. Rose and Mr. Woodhead;

(2) when copies of the report on primary education are to be sent to schools and colleges; how many copies are to be printed; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the interval between the publication date of the report and its likely receipt by schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I published the typescript of the report "Curriculum Organisation and Classroom Practice in Primary Schools" as soon as I received it, and placed copies in the Library on that day, 22 January. It took until 5 February to prepare and produce the initial run of 145,000 printed copies. The extensive mailing of six copies to each primary school and further copies to local authorities, teacher educators and other interested bodies should be completed by 13 February. I have today placed copies of the printed report in the Vote Office.

Assisted Places

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children attend city technology colleges, grant-maintained schools and grammar schools and use the assisted-places scheme.

Mr. Eggar: The numbers of pupils attending those schools in England in January 1991 are shown in the table. In the same academic year 26,740 pupils in independent schools received support under the assisted places scheme.

	Number of pupils
City technology colleges	3,429
Grant-maintained schools[1]	36,445
LEA-maintained grammar schools	91,116

[1] Includes grant-maintained grammar schools.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the pupil-teacher ratio in Lancashire in (a) 1979 and (b) to latest date in (i) secondary and (ii) primary schools.

Mr. Fallon: The pupil-teacher ratios requested are shown in the table.

Pupil-teacher ratios in Lancashire local education authority 1979 to 1991[1]

January	Maintained primary schools	Maintained secondary schools
1979	24·7	16·5
1980	24·2	16·4
1981	24·2	16·4
1982	24·4	16·7
1983	23·8	16·6
1984	23·2	16·4
1985	23·7	16·6
1986	23·7	16·4
1987	23·6	15·9
1988	23·3	15·6

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities submitted results for the pupils with special educational needs with their returns of assessment tests for seven-year-old readers; and whether these were used in the compilation of the tables published on 19 December 1991.

Mr. Eggar: Returns from special schools were not included in the results published on 19 December. However, many LEAs included the results of pupils with special educational needs on roll in mainstream schools in their returns. It is not, however, possible to identify these pupils and hence the LEAs concerned.

Seven-year-olds

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) pursuant to his answer of 16 January to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr.

Spearing), Official Report, columns 580-82, if he will list the reasons why some of the returns of assessment tests for seven-year-old readers submitted by local education authorities were not usable;

(2) if he will state for each local education authority the percentage of their assessment tests for seven-year-old readers which they submitted to his Department.

Mr. Eggar: Certain returns could not be used because they were incomplete or wrongly completed. Those returns were referred back to the LEA concerned. Any corrected results which were returned in time for publication and were usable, were included in the report published on 19 December. The table gives the percentage of returns of the test results for seven-year-olds received for each local education authority. Both usable and unusable returns are included.

Chorlton School

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 449, if he will detail the steps taken by the Secretary of State to expedite the matters regarding Chorlton school between 25 July and 30 September and between 30 September and 5 December; when he became aware that the pupil in question had already commenced her secondary school career; and if he will publish the information provided by Manchester local education authority that led him to conclude that he did not need to issue a formal directive to the school.

Mr. Fallon: Officials wrote to the chairman of governors of Chorlton school on 22 July, asking the school to comply with Trafford LEA's request for information and saying that if the governing body failed without good reason to meet this request, the Secretary of State would be minded to direct it to do so. Because of the holiday period, the full governing body did not meet to consider the issue until 10 September. Since the governors did not agree at that meeting to provide the necessary information, my right hon. and learned Friend decided to require them to do so by issuing a direction under section 68 of the Education Act 1944.

The issue of direction was delayed because the Manchester LEA told officials at a meeting on 4 October that it planned to discuss the case with the governors on 9 October. Immediately after the 9 October meeting, solicitors acting for the governors asked for a full list of the pupils concerned, and confirmed on 21 October that the necessary information would be supplied to Trafford. However, despite repeated requests from the Department, the information was not forthcoming, and my right hon. and learned Friend issued his direction on 5 December. The information requested has now been supplied and Trafford hopes to consider outstanding cases within the next fortnight.

My right hon. and learned Friend was not informed that the hon. Member's constituent was already attending secondary school, although it is common in complex admission cases for pupils to attend school pending the final outcome of their appeal.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities have already delegated 84 per cent. of their funds to schools.

Mr. Fallon [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1991 c. 409-12]: I have today announced a number of developments which will extend local management of schools—LMS—to every school in England, and will ensure that all schools have more freedom to run their own affairs. These are:

(1) the approval of the remaining 12 inner London LEAs' schemes;

(2) the approval of 60 LEA proposals for secondary schools to have their own bank accounts;

(3) an exemption for most small schools from the competitive tendering requirements that apply to all LEAs;

(4) confirmation that LMS schemes will extend to cover special schools.

These developments set the seal on the success of LMS. From 1 April, an LMS scheme will operate in each of the 109 LEAs in England.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Suspended Sittings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward proposals to enable motions under Standing Order No. 10 (Sittings of the House (Suspended Sittings)) to be moved by any hon. Member.

Mr. MacGregor: No.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Boarding Schools

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) for each local education authority and (b) by location, the current state-owned boarding schools and the pupil establishment for each school.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

School	Education and Library Board Area	Boarders	Overall Enrolments (Inc Boarders)
Coleraine High	North-Eastern	47	711
Thornfield, Special, Newtownabbey	North-Eastern	13	69
Fleming Fulton, Special, Belfast	Belfast	16	172
Beechlawn, Special, Hillsborough	South-Eastern	20	201
Killard House, Special, Newtownards	South-Eastern	20	210
Fallowfield, Special, Lurgan	Southern	25	25

Health Service Staff

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies have been conducted, or are under way, into the administrative workloads of doctors, nurses and clinical staff in the professions associated with medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: No studies which specifically examine the administrative workloads of these staff groups have been undertaken, or are currently planned. However, manpower planning in units of management will address the duties of medical and nursing staff in reprofiling and skill mix exercises. The duties of junior doctors will also be scrutinised within the current initiative to reduce their hours.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sales of capital assets have arisen from closures of mental handicap hospitals; and if he will list the assets disposed of and the money raised by each sale.

Mr. Hanley: To date, two small mental handicap hospitals have been sold, namely:

Hospital	Year of disposal	Money realised £
Cultra House	1988	800,000
Drumarg House	1989	40,000

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number, for each regional health authority, of in-patient residents in health service facilities for patients with a mental handicap for each year since 1981; and what proportion of the reduction in numbers is due to discharge and what proportion due to death, in each regional health authority.

Mr. Hanley: The table shows the number of patients with a mental handicap resident in mental handicap hospitals and units in Northern Ireland at 31 December each year from 1981 to 1990. It is not possible to calculate the proportions of the reduction due to discharge or to deaths as the data on admissions and discharges collected centrally do not relate to individual patients.

Year	Number of Patients
1981	1,737
1982	1,712
1983	1,577
1984	1,599
1985	1,577
1986	1,509
1987	1,434
1988	1,412
1989	1,296
1990	1,185

Terrorism

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claims have been made against the Northern Ireland Office in respect of fatalities and injuries which have occurred from activities by the security forces against terrorists in each of the last five years; and what sums have been paid in compensation.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, under the provisions of the statutory compensation scheme in Northern Ireland, no compensation can be paid to, or in respect of a criminal injury to, any person who has been engaged in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism.

Harbour Authorities (Members)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of the members of (a) Warrenpoint harbour authority and (b) Belfast harbour commissioners; and if he will identify with which user firms of these harbours each of those persons are associated.

Mr. Needham: The members of Warrenpoint harbour authority and Belfast harbour commissioners are:

Northern Ireland Tourist Board

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual salary of the part-time chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board.

Mr. Needham: The salary paid to the chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board is £22,195 per annum.

Forestry Production

Mr. John. D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to increase forestry production in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The current timber production by the Forest Service in Northern Ireland is about 200,000 m^3 per annum. This is projected to increase to 250,000 m^3 per annum by the end of the decade.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions during each year since 1986 a loss of electricity supply has been experienced in each district council area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Northern Ireland Electricity does not hold information on electricity supply interruptions by district council area.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are to improve electricity supply in (i) south Armagh and (ii) the rest of the Newry and Armagh constituency.

Mr. Needham: Northern Ireland Electricity has completed a detailed study of electricity supply in the south Down/south Armagh area and work has commenced on a £5·5 million programme to strengthen the supply system in the area.

Railway Crossings

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many open railway level crossings, for which appropriate orders have been laid, have been converted to half-barrier crossings.

Mr. Needham: I am advised by the management of Northern Ireland Railways that, the orders to convert them from open crossings having come into effect, six automatic half-barrier crossings have been commissioned. Details are set out in the table:

Crossing	Date commissioned
Slaght	2 September 1991
Galgorm	30 September 1991
Cromore	20 December 1991

Crossing	Date commissioned
Broughdone	13 January 1992
Glarryford	20 January 1992
Killagan	27 January 1992

Note: In each case the barrier was commissioned on the same day as the order came into effect.

EMPLOYMENT

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will introduce a licensing fee for offshore oil companies to cover or to contribute towards the cost of the health and safety inspectors in charge of offshore oil safety provisions.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer that I gave him on 4 February 1992, Official Report, column 117.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Employment Department group has a number of computer systems, many of which are small. The EDG's systems are registered under, and fully comply with, the Data Protection Act, which compels the recording of all sources and disclosures of data. None of them has links with the police national computer and few have links outside the EDG.

The criteria for participation in computer systems which require links with those in other organisations are legality, business need and priority. The EDG uses computer systems for financial management and payments. For example, payment reconciliation information is received by tape from HMSO, salaries are paid using links to the bankers automated clearing service and in the Employment Service there are tape links between the benefit-related payments system, and its successor employment service payments, and the Department of Social Security's national insurance recording system and giro reconciliation systems. In the Health and Safety Executive, terminal access to some of its systems is provided to other organisations, and vice versa, where there are joint responsibilities—for example, with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for pesticide information. Statistical information is supplied to meet legislative requirements, and to external bodies. A variety of data on employment-linked issues is made available.

Significant systems on which the EDG is involved in discussions are the inter-department business register, which would hold a register of employers, and an inter-departmental alert scheme for toxic substances. The proposed Employment Service local office system is planned to have links to exchange client data with the national unemployment benefit system, which is operated by the Employment Service as the paying agent on behalf of the Department of Social Security.

Travel-to-interview Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the regional distribution of uptake and costs of the travel-to-interview scheme for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Cash Limits

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for changes to his Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1991-92.

Mr. Howard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made: the cash limit for class VI, vote 1—programmes and central services—will be reduced by £8,730,000 from £2,438,307,000 to £2,429,577,000.

There are a number of changes to reallocate provision within the vote. They mainly reflect changes in demand for various programmes and are as follows: a £17,500,000 increase for the small firms loan guarantee scheme; a £13,000,000 increase for the technical and vocational education initiative; a £13,500,000 increase for youth training; a £5,500,000 increase for expenditure on the national records of achievement; an increase of £4,514,000 for working capital loans made to training and enterprise councils for youth training, employment training, the enterprise allowance scheme and employment action and offset by receipts on these loans; an increase of £4,500,000 on capital expenditure; decreased receipts of £2,200,000 from the small-firms loan guarantee scheme; an increase of £1,500,000 for the training credits for young people pilot scheme; and increase of £9,659,000 running costs partially met by transfers from other votes within the group and increased receipts from the national insurance fund; a £59,773,000 decrease in provision for employment training; a £16,321,000 decrease in provision for the local initiative fund; a decrease of £12,644,000 in the contribution from the Welsh Office, class XVI, vote 4, in respect of the cost of services in Wales; and a £5,000,000 decrease in provision for business and enterprise support. The decrease in the cash limit on this vote more than offsets an increase of £2,000,000 on class VI, vote 3.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 2—Employment Service—will be increased by a token £1,000 from £488,880,000 to £488,881,000. This is the net result of an increase of £24,630,000 in running costs, mainly in connection with the administration of unemployment benefit payments; an increase of £5,348,000 for capital expenditure, also mainly in connection with administering unemployment benefit payments; a net decrease of £1,797,000 in programme provision, which includes £200,000 provision for a pilot scheme to assist lone parents to return to work; increased receipts of £27,532,000 from the Department of Social Security—class XI, vote 4—and other minor changes, mainly in connection with the ES revenue generation scheme.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 3—Health and Safety Commission and Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service—will be increased by £339,000 from £178,806,000 to £179,145,000. This increase is offset by a reduction of the cash limit on class VI, vote 1. The increase is the net result of an increase of £2,000,000 from vote 1 for capital expenditure; increased receipts of £451,000 from the Department of Transport—class VII, vote 2—for the railways inspectorate work carried out by the Health and Safety Executive; and transfer of running costs of £1,150,000 from the Health and Safety Executive and £60,000 from the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service to the Department of Employment—vote 1.

The running costs limit for the Department of Employment—votes 1 and 2—will be increased by £34,289,000 from £1,102,424,000 to £1,136,713,000. The running costs limit for the Health and Safety Commission and Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service—vote 3—will be decreased by £1,210,000 from £153,023,000 to £151,813,000.

Those increases are either offset as described above or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the workings of the loan guarantee scheme; and what amendments have been made in its operation since it was introduced.

Mr. Forth: The loan guarantee scheme was introduced to assist viable small firms which are unable to raise conventional finance due to lack of security or track record. By providing a 70 per cent. guarantee—85 per cent. in inner-city task force areas—the scheme encourages banks and other financial institutions to lend where they would normally be unable to do so.

In return for the guarantee the Department charges the borrower an annual premium of 2·5 per cent.—2 per cent. in inner-city task force areas—of the guaranteed portion of the outstanding loan.

Since the scheme began in June 1981 the major changes affecting the scheme have been:

1984

Premium charge increased from an initial 3 per cent. to 5 per cent. per year on the guaranteed portion of the loan.

1985

Administrative responsibility for the scheme moved from Department of Trade and Industry to Department of Employment.

1986

Premium charge reduced from 5 per cent. to 2·5 per cent. per year on the guaranteed portion of the loan.

1988

Simplified arrangements introduced for loans of £15,000 or less.

85 per cent. guarantee for businesses in Inner City Task Force areas introduced.

1990

Premium percentage reduced to 2 per cent. for those businesses in Inner City Task Force Areas.

Agriculture and horticulture became business activities eligible for Scheme assistance.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications there have been under the loan guarantee scheme in each year since its introduction.

Mr. Forth: The number of applications under the loan guarantee scheme in each year since its introduction in June 1981 has been:

	Number
1981-82	3,351
1982-83	6,045
1983-84	4,889
1984-85	2,081
1985-86	543
1986-87	1,042
1987-88	1,222
1988-89	2,266
1989-90	3,214
1990-91	3,394
[1]1991-92	2,155

[1] To 31 December 1991.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cost to the Government of underwriting the loan guarantee scheme in each year since its introduction.

Mr. Forth: Information on scheme expenditure prior to the Department of Employment becoming responsible for the scheme is not available. For subsequent years the net cost to the Government was:

	£ million
1985-86	27·1
1986-87	11·2
1987-88	3·6
1988-89	3·8
1989-90	5·6
1990-91	16·5
[1]1991-92	20·6

[1] To 31 December 1992.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many failures there have been in the loan guaranteee scheme in each year since its inception.

Mr. Forth: Figures prior to June 1987 are not available by individual financial year. The numbers of failures by financial year since July 1987 were:

	Numbers
Total up to June 1987	6,164
1987-88 (from July 1987)	248
1988-89	402
1989-90	656
1990-91	1,310
1991-92 (to December 1991)	1,348
Overall total	10,128

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the planned programme for the conclusion of the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Jackson: The technical and vocational educational initiative (TVEI) is a 10-year programme, running from 1987 to 1997, in which education authorities participate for up to seven years. Some authorities are nearing the end of their contracts. The Department is working with these authorities on the development of plans for assimilating the lessons of TVEI and will continue to include them in any arrangements for disseminating information or other outcomes from the national programme, and to encourage the continuation of networking arrangements.

Income Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the mean, median, quartile and decile earnings for (a) manual workers in manufacturing and (b) non-manuals in the non-manufacturing private sector together with the numbers represented by each of the two categories; and in each case what was the increase in real earnings since 1979.

Mr. Forth: Information on the mean, median, quartile and decile earnings, and sample numbers, for manual workers in manufacturing, may be found in tables 54, 56, 74 and 76 of part C of the new earnings survey reports from 1979 onwards. Figures for the non-manufacturing private sector are not available.

Information on the retail prices index (all items) to convert 1979 figures to 1991 prices is published in table 6.4 of the latest Employment Gazette for April 1991, and in table 26 of the annual supplement to "Economic Trends" for April of earlier years. Copies of the publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the figures corresponding to table 19 of part A of the 1991 new earnings survey for manual workers in manufacturing industry and for non-manuals in the non-manufacturing private sector, together with the total numbers represented by each category.

Mr. Forth; The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey closest to that requested is given in the following table. Figures for non-manual workers in the non-manufacturing private sector are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the mean, median, quartile and decile earnings for part-time employees, excluding those who received no pay for the survey period together with the numbers and aggregate incomes of those earning less than £54 and between £54 and £100 per week; and if he will provide corresponding figures for 1979 which likewise distinguish between part-time workers earning less than the lower earnings limit and between that limit and the ceiling for the lowest income category.

Mr. Forth: Information from the 1991 new earnings survey on the weekly earnings of part-time employees on adult rates is published in table 19 of part A of the survey report, a copy of which is in the Library. These figures relate to (a) all employees, and (b) employees whose pay for the survey period was not affected by absence. Figures excluding employees who received no pay for the survey period are not available, except for mean (average) earnings, which were as follows in April 1991 (£ per week).

Men £	Women £	All £

Projections for 1992-93 concerning part-time employees earning less than £54 (the National Insurance lower earnings limit), excluding those with no earnings, and between £54 and £100, are as follows:

	Numbers	Aggregate earnings
Less than £54	2·25 million	£4 billion
£54—£100	1·50 million	£6 billion

Comparable figures for 1979 are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, further to table 12 of part A of the 1991 new earnings survey, he will publish a table showing the mean, median, quartile and decile earnings for (a) manual workers in manufacturing and (b) non-manuals in the non-manufacturing private sector in the Greater London sub-region and in the west midlands region, together with the numbers represented by each category in each region.

Mr. Forth: Information on the mean earnings, and sample numbers, for manual workers in manufacturing, for Greater London and for the west midlands, may be found in tables 118 and 120 of part E of the new earnings survey reports from 1979 onwards. There is no available information for median, quartile and decile earnings for manufacturing on a regional basis. Figures for the mean, median, quartile and decile earnings for non-manuals, in the non-manufacturing private sector, are not available. Copies of the publications are available in the Library.

Toxic Emissions (Merseyside)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place a copy in the Library of the health and safety inspector's report on emissions and leaks of toxic fluids and gases on Merseyside.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) investigations into the circumstances of recent incidents involving emissions and leaks of toxic fluids and gases on Merseyside are continuing. At this stage HSE has no plans to publish reports on its investigations into these incidents.

HEALTH

Management Executive

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the present work, research and development programmes of the NHS management executive with regard to the assessment of the health of the population and the cost effectiveness of present spending programmes.

Mr. Dorrell: The assessment of health need is the responsibility of district health authorities. The management executive offers a wide range of support to local health needs assessment and the assessment of cost effectiveness of services.

Expenditure

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish an updated table of hospital and county health service programme expenditure by age group comparable with that for 1986-87 supplied to the Social Services Select Committee in 1988 and publish such a table both in cash terms and cash adjusted for NHS pay and prices using the same base as the 1986-87 table.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table. The expenditure relates only to that by regional health authorities and excludes expenditure on certain centrally financed services, and on joint finance with the personal social services, as well as all expenditure on family health services.

The methodology for estimating the distribution of expenditure by age has been revised since the 1986-87 estimates were made, largely as a result of changes in the way in which financial data are reported. The figures for 1989-90 are therefore not comparable with the figures for 1986-87.

Changes in input volumes are an inadequate guide to the level of service the NHS can be expected to achieve, since they do not reflect the continuing success of the NHS in increasing the efficiency with which it uses resources. The table therefore also shows expenditure figures in real terms, ie adjusted by the GDP deflator.

Child Protection

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to support moves towards introducing approved or accredited social workers to tackle complex child protection cases.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are in discussion with the local authority associations, the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) and the Association of Directors of Social Services on this issue.

Liverpool (Proposed Hospital)

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds will be in (a) the acute and (b) the recovery wings of the proposed new obstetrics and gynaecology hospital in Liverpool.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is planned that there will be a total of 263 beds, of which 163 will be acute.

Asthma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the reported level of asthma sufferers, by age range of 0-11, 11-21, 21-45 and over 45 years for each London health district from 1980 to the present.

Mr. Dorrell: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The vast majority of asthma sufferers do not attend hospital as in-patients.

Prescriptions (Respiratory Drugs)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of children's prescriptions, by family practitioner committee area, of ventolin or equivalent respiratory drugs for each year since 1980.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Health Units (Deficits)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish his Department's analysis of regions' deficits—"Financial management of the NHS: Winter 1991-92, DMU and Trust deficits", month nine report;

(2) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-ended deficit and current deficit of the London Ambulance Service;

(3) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit and the current deficit in Bloomsbury and Islington district health authority;

(4) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit in the Camberwell district health authority;

(5) if he will make a statement about current and recent deficit forecast year-end deficits in (a) the West Suffolk district health authority and (b) the Cambridge district health authority;

(6) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit at the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond street;

(7) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit at (a) the Royal Surrey county trust, (b) the Nuffield orthopaedic centre and (c) the North West Hertfordshire mental handicap unit;

(8) if he will make a statement on (a) the current financial situation for both capital and revenue and (b) the forecast year-end deficit, at Guy's hospital;

(9) if he will make a statement about the deficit and forecast year-end deficit at St. Bartholomew's hospital;

(10) if he will make a statement about the number of units reporting current deficits above £100,000 in January 1992;

(11) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit in the national heart and chest hospitals special health authority;

(12) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit in the (a) South West Hertfordshire district health authority and (b) Riverside health authority;

(13) if he will make a statement about the year-end deficit and current deficit in the Bromsgrove and Redditch district health authority;

(14) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit and current deficit in the Basingstoke district health authority;

(15) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit in East Surrey district health authority;

(16) if he will make a statement about the forecast year-end deficit and current deficit at the (a) Salford and (b) South Manchester district health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: The recently leaked internal management document to which the questions refer contained unaudited management information, some of which has been overtaken by events. The proper way of reporting the financial position of the National Health Service and its component parts is in the annual accounts of these bodies for 1991-92, which will be published in due course.

Community Care

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress being made in implementing the Government's community care reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The policies set out in the White Paper "Caring for People" are widely supported by local authorities, health authorities, voluntary organisations, practitioners in the field and many other interested commentators. The objectives are that good quality local services are provided that are responsive to the needs of users and carers, that provide choice and that enable elderly, disabled or vulnerable people to live as independently as possible in their own homes or in homely settings in the community. The Government attach particular importance to the successful implementation of these reforms.

Special monitoring arrangements have been established. The regional social services inspectorate and regional health authorities have been asked to submit six-monthly reports on the progress being made by authorities in their regions against a checklist of issues. The first reports were submitted at the end of September.

These reports showed that overall, satisfactory progress was being made at that stage in implementing the reforms. Most local authorities had met the specific requirements of the first phase of implementation by establishing complaints procedures and "arm's-length" inspection units for residential homes by 1 April 1991. They were also establishing a wide range of projects under the new mental illness specific grant which supports £30 million of expenditure in 1991-92 and £43·6 million in 1992-93 and under the new alcohol and drug misuse specific grant which supports £2 million of expenditure in 1991-92 and £3 million in 1992-93. Nearly all are on course to produce their first community care plans for 1 April 1992. A number of local authorities were making progress in clarifying the different "purchaser" and "provider" roles within the authority. We expect all authorities to make progress on this issue in the next few months. It is also clear that the degree of collaboration between health and local authorities which is essential to successful implementation has notably improved and that many authorities are making significant efforts to involve voluntary organisations, users and carers in preparing their plans.

Authorities should now be addressing the detail of the reforms' implications, having undertaken much of the necessary groundwork for full implementation by 1 April 1993. At that stage, local authorities must have in place needs-based assessment systems. Funds will also be transferred to them from the Department of Social Security to enable them to arrange care for those people who would have entered residential or nursing home care and looked to the Department of Social Security for financial support. Implementing the remaining aspects of the reforms will be a challenging task. Local and health authorities will need to tackle a number of difficult issues. Closer collaboration will also be required between authorities generally and independent sector providers of community care services. The next round of the monitoring exercise will concentrate on those aspects to which authorities must give priority in order to achieve a smooth and successful introduction of the remainder of the changes required by legislation. Once these elements are in place authorities will be in a good position to take advantage of the opportunities created and to develop more appropriate and more responsive services to meet the needs of users and carers.

NHS Estate

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for each NHS region the amount needed for repairs and maintenance to bring the estate to an overall condition which exhibits only minor deterioration.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 12 July 1991, Official Report, at columns 500-4. That gave the figures at March 1990; the final figures at March 1991 are not yet available.

Ko Hsuan School, Chawleigh

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute an inquiry into the welfare of children at the Ko Hsuan school in Chawleigh, north Devon.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that a joint social services and police investigation took place on 3 February and that the findings of the investigation are now being studied. We do not anticipate the need for a Government inquiry at this time. We will, however, keep the situation under review.

Under the terms of the Children Act 1989 the proprietors of the school have a duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children accommodated in the school.

Children's Beds (Oxfordshire)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the proposed rationalisation of children's beds in Oxfordshire district health authority; and what are the (a) current and (b) forecast end of year deficits for the authority.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her today. I understand that Oxfordshire health authority has no plans to rationalise children's beds.

Novopen Needles

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to end the charging of diabetics for supplies of Novopen needles.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Needles for insulin injection pens including Novopens are not compatible with conventional syringes and so arrangements for both pens and needles have to be considered together. We are currently reviewing the case for making both these items available on GP prescription.

NHS Trusts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by regional health authority, those units and hospitals which are not in the first, second or third waves of trusts, and which are eligible to apply for trust status.

Mr. Dorrell: Any NHS hospital or other unit involved directly in patient care may apply for NHS trust status.

National Blood Authority

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the consultation exercise into establishing a national blood authority.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 29 January at column 586.

Ambulances

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will state for each metropolitan ambulance authority (a) the percentage of emergency calls responded to within seven minutes and (b) the percentage of emergency calls responded to within 14 minutes for each quarter since March 1991;

(2) if he will state for each non-metropolitan ambulance authority (a) the percentage of emergency calls responded to within eight minutes and (b) the percentage of emergency calls responded to within 20 minutes for each quarter since March 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 24 January at columns 391-96.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, columns 392-94, if he will give corresponding figures for ambulance response times for the years 1983 and 1987.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested was not collected centrally until the financial year 1987-88.

The tables show the numbers and percentages of emergency calls being responded to within the standards of eight and 20 minutes for non-metropolitan authorities and seven and 14 minutes for metropolitan authorities for 1987-88.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the average length of service expected from emergency ambulance vehicles in terms of (a) years and (b) miles; and if he will give for each ambulance authority the percentage of vehicles which meet those specifications.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Cancelled Operations

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for each regional health authority (a) the number of scheduled operations cancelled and (b) the average number of operations per session held for each quarter since 31 March 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the number of operations cancelled is not collected centrally. Statistics on the number of cases operated on in each region per scheduled session held are collected annually. Data for 1990-91 will be published in the near future in "NHS Operating Theatres Availability and Use, England, Financial year 1990-91", a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Maternity Beds

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by national health service region (a) for 1980 and (b) for 1990-91 the hospitals in England which had consultant obstetric or general practitioner maternity beds, giving the number of beds of each type in each hospital.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The information requested for 1990-91 has been placed in the Library. Figures for 1980 and 1989-90 were placed in the Library in reply to the question from the hon. Member for Peckham on 15 March 1991 at column 709. Due to changes in the type of information collected, the data for the years concerned are not strictly comparable. The data for 1980 identified the beds available in the type of unit concerned. Since 1987, the bed type has been classified according to clinical responsibility—by consultant, general practitioner or for joint use. In addition, many of the individual sites were not open during one or other of the years in question. While there has been an overall reduction in the number of beds over the period, this has been accompanied by a significant reduction in the average length of stay of over 30 per cent.

Home Helps

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of home helps employed by local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 February 1992]: The net expenditure on home helps and the numbers of home helps directly employed by social services departments in England (in whole time equivalent terms at 30 September) in each year are set out in the table.

	Net expenditure on home help services £ million	Staff numbers directly employed
1979	132·8	44,660
1980	157·1	46,637
1981	186·9	46,541

Percentage increase over the period	[1]67·0	25·0

[1] In real terms.

Note: Staff figures relate only to local authorities' directly employed staff.

Although there is a drop in the number of home helps since 1988 the expenditure on the service has been increasing, indicating that local authorities are contracting out an increasing proportion of the service to the voluntary and private sectors.

ENERGY

Orimulsion

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest position with regard to the issues before him relating to National Power plc's proposals to burn orimulsion at Pembroke power station; what decisions under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989, or under section 10 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, are still awaited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: South Pembrokeshire district council, a relevant planning authority, has objected to National Power plc's application under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 for my right hon. Friend's consent to fit electrostatic precipitators in order to use orimulsion as the fuel for the Pembroke power station. My right hon. Friend is, therefore, statutorily obliged to call for a public inquiry to be held into the application unless the district council withdraws its objection.

Before arranging the inquiry, my right hon. Friend does, however, need to know the views of all statutory consultees, including the other relevant planning authority, Dyfed county council, in order to determine the matters that are relevant to his consideration of the application. The relevant inquiry procedure rules require him to issue a statement of such matters.

The authorisation of a licence under section 10 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 is a matter for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has established links with the following organisations for the following purposes:

Organisation and Purpose
HM Paymaster General—Pay-roll
Department of Trade and Industry—Accounts and Library Services
British Geological Survey—Petroleum Engineering data.
AEA—Energy Technology Data
HMIP—Radio-active Incident Monitoring.
OECD—Transferral of papers.

My Department also subscribes to several commercial databases such as Lexis and those available with BT Gold.

The main criterion used in deciding whether to join a system is whether it would further the objectives of the Department in a cost-effective manner. My Department is not linked to the police national computer. All systems which contain data on personnel are registered with the Data Protection Registrar.

Solar Energy Devices

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when his Department's programme on photovoltaic cell-based solar energy devices began; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: On 8 May, I announced that the Government would fund a programme of research into the use of solar power for electricity production. The first contract under that programme was let in June 1991. To date, contracts have been placed covering work to the value of more than £200,000. The purpose of the work is to assess the potential for photovoltaic electricity generation in the United Kingdom, particularly when incorporated into building fabric.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the total number of staff employed by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and British Nuclear Fuels overall and at their Warrington establishment in 1979, 1987 and at the present date.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am advised that the total number of employees at the two sites in Warrington—Risley and Culcheth—in 1979, 1987 and at the start of 1992, with the overall number employed by the UKAEA and British Nuclear Fuels plc are as follows:

	Employed at Risley	Employed at Culcheth	Employed overall
1979	4,075	240	26,743
1987	4,941	290	30,315
1992	3,717	438	24,644

Renewable Energy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a subscription to "Renew: the Independent Journal on Renewable Energy", produced by the Network for Alternative Technology and Technology Assessment.

Mr. Wakeham: The Department has a subscription to "Renew", which is published by the Network for Alternative Technology and Technology Assessment.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report, "Energy Efficiency and Renewables; Recent Experience on Mainland Europe", prepared by David Olivier for Energy Advisory Associates.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A copy of this report was ordered by the library of the Department of Energy on 4 February.

Nuclear Materials Convention

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to seek a strengthening of the convention on the physical protection of nuclear materials 1980.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have nothing further to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 20 January 1992, at column 7.

DEFENCE

Headquarter Contracts

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total amounts paid by his Department in respect of headquarter contracts to United Kingdom-based contracts in each of the three years to 31 March 1991.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence paid the following total amounts to United Kingdom-based contractors for the financial years 1988-89 to 1990-91:

	£ million
1988-89	7,776·38
1989-90	8,232·57
1990-91	9,132·48

Centrally held records do not differentiate between payments made under headquarters contracts and other types of payments. The precise information requested could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the precise amounts paid to each of the 10 contractors which received the largest shares of headquarter contracts awarded by his Department in each of the three years to 31 March 1991.

Mr. Alan Clark: The 10 contractors that received the largest payments from my Department in each of the years specified were:

	£ million
1988-89
British Aerospace plc	1,085·94
The General Electric Co. plc	902·04
Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Consortium plc	409·31
Rolls-Royce plc	329·20
The Plessey Co. plc	308·74
Devonport Management Ltd.	236·79
Ferranti plc	209·71
Thorn EMI plc	157·95
FKI Babcock plc	151·08
GKN plc	131·88
1989-90
BAe plc	926·39
GEC plc	785·43
VSEL Consortium plc	561·88
Rolls-Royce plc	319·73
Devonport Management plc	277·22
Plessey plc	248·44
Ferranti International plc	220·96
FKI Babcock plc	171·54
Thorn EMI plc	163·11
Westland Group plc	138·30
1990-91
BAe plc	996·29
GEC plc	799·92
VSEL Consortium plc	591·35
Rolls-Royce plc	399·86

GEC Siemens plc	246·13
Ferranti International plc	198·05
Babcock International Group plc	183·90
Thorn EMI plc	165·67
Vickers plc	154·48

The proportion of these sums represented by headquarters contracts could only be identified at disproportionate cost.

Low Flying (Compensation)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid out by his Department in respect of compensation to farmers and landowners for loss or injury to animals caused by low-flying aircraft in each of the past three years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information is not immediately available in the form requested. As at November 1991 the cumulative amount of compensation paid in respect of livestock losses resulting from military low flying activity, for the last three financial years 1988 to 1991 was £569,313. Our information does not identify claimants by occupation.

Defence Research Agency

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the employment implications, in terms of jobs lost, gross and net, of the decision to merge the quality assurance laboratory at Woolwich with the Defence Research Agency near Farnborough and to close the outstations at Bromley, Bridgwater and Manchester; and if he will give details for each of the locations separately.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to the right hon. Member.

Hunt Transport

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, columns 213-14 what elements of the costs of transporting horses and riders to hunting meets are met from public funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Trident

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what long-lead items for the fourth Trident submarine are under construction; how much money has been spent on them; and under what parliamentary vote the money has been committed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Construction of steelwork and engineering items, including hull units, sub-frames, bulkheads and pumps has started under long lead funding arrangements. Expenditure to December 1991 was £138 million. Submarine construction is appropriated to Ministry of Defence vote 2F.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mink

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on how many occasions in 1990 and 1991 his inspectors supervised, examined or monitored the slaughter of factory farm mink by injection or gassing;

(2) if he will outline the methods of gassing used to kill mink observed by his inspectors during visits to fur factory farms in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Maclean: Officers of the State Veterinary Service observed the slaughter of mink, by gassing, on four occasions in England in 1990. The methods observed involved euthanasia by carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of research carried out by his Department to ensure that the method of gassing used to kill mink on Britain's fur factory farms is humane.

Mr. Maclean: This Department has carried out no specific research into the gassing of mink. Research and obervations in other countries have concluded that gassing by carbon monoxide or carbon dioxide as practised in Britain is humane.

Premium Schemes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount paid out in (a) the sheep variable premium scheme and (b) the beef premium scheme at each auction market in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Gummer: This is an operational matter for the Intervention Board executive agency whose chief executive will write to the hon. Member about the information requested.

Farm Income

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the percentage change in farming incomes in the United Kingdom after taking inflation into account in each year since 1986-87.

Mr. Curry: Details of farming incomes have recently been published in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom: 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Indices of the aggregate income from farming in real terms are contained in table 6.4 and indices of average net farm income in real terms by type of farm are shown in the lower part of table 8.1.

Pollution Control

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a grant for farmers for separating clean from dirty water similar to the grant already available for pollution control measures.

Mr. Curry: The European Community regulations on farm capital grants set a maximum rate of 35 per cent. for grants on pollution control equipment. Because we target our aid on the main items and do not cover ancillary equipment, such as clean water separation, we have persuaded the Commission to allow us to pay grant at the exceptionally high rate of 50 per cent. If we were to widen the scope of these grants we would have to match this by offsetting cuts in the grant rate.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the planned expansion of environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Boscawen) on 6 February.

Lake District

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of farmers eligible for the environmentally sensitive areas scheme in the Lake District national park, living in parishes which are entirely within the park and within South Lakeland district council, giving both the number of parishes concerned and the number of parishes omitted from the calculation owing to their being only partly within the park.

Mr. Curry: The precise area to be covered by the new Lake District environmentally sensitive area has not yet been decided. Proposals will be issued for consultation shortly.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends taking to prevent Dutch flag ships from increasing their share of plaice, cod and sole quotas from 1 January 1993 onwards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: As a result of the European Court ruling given in the Factortame case last year, non-British EC nationals may register fishing vessels in the United Kingdom provided those vessels are to be operated, managed and controlled from here. Such vessels are subject to United Kingdom licensing and quota management rules, but any restriction on grounds of nationality would be discriminatory and contrary to Community law.

Multi-annual Guidance Programme

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress the United Kingdom is making with fleet reductions under the multi-annual guidance programme; and when individuals in fleets such as those at Lowestoft can expect to be eligible for new build grants.

Mr. Curry: The payment of construction grants is dependent on member states meeting their multi-annual guidance programme targets. The United Kingdom did not meet its end 1991 target and 1992 to 1996 targets have not yet been promulgated.

Divisional Offices (Exeter and Truro)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he received the study relating to the future of his Ministry's Exeter and Truro divisional offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The study was completed shortly after Christmas, but detailed consideration of its findings did not begin until after my right hon. Friend the Minister met hon. Members from Cornwall in mid-January.

SCOTLAND

Rent Arrears

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide, in relation to rent arrears for each district and islands council in Scotland for 1985-86 and each succeeding year for which the information is available (a) the number of tenants in arrears and this figure as a percentage of all local authority tenants, (b) the average and total amounts due and (c) the total amount as a percentage of local authorities' revenue from rents.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 January 1992]: The available information is shown in the following tables, which should be read in conjunction with the following notes:

(1) Information on local authority rent arrears relates to the amounts outstanding on a particular date rather than to financial years.

(2) Until 1988, rent arrears information was collected from local authorities on the basis of the position at 30 September. Thereafter, it has been collected on the basis of the position at 31 March. No information on rent arrears on any date in 1989 was collected.

(3) Column 1 in the tables shows the number of local authority tenants who were in arrears of rent on the relevant date shown at the head of the table.

(4) Column 2 in the tables shows for each local authority the number of tenants in arrears expressed as a percentage of the total number of tenants of that authority.

(5) Column 3 in the tables shows the average arrears per tenant (in £) of those tenants in arrears.

(6) Column 4 in the tables shows the total amount of arrears outstanding (in £ million) for each authority on the relevant date shown at the head of the table.

Condensation and Dampness

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money his Department is making available to local housing authorities in Scotland to deal specifically with problems of condensation and dampness in council housing stock; what is his assessment of the extent of this problem in Scotland; and the prospects for achieving a solution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1992]: The gross provisional housing capital allocations to local authorities for 1992-93 total £412 million for expenditure on the housing revenue account block for investment in authorities' own housing stock. Local authorities have estimated that at 31 March 1991 about 259,000 local authority houses were affected by condensation and damp. It is for local authorities to decide how best to deploy the substantial resources available to them to meet local housing needs, including the need to tackle condensation and dampness.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy towards support for small independent electricity generators who use renewable energy sources; and whether he intends to take any further steps to ensure that electricity distribution companies increase their use of renewable energy.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 31 January 1992]: The hon. Member is referring to the parliamentary answer given to the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 15 May 1991 at column 208-9. These arrangements have enabled a number of new small hydro projects to be brought forward for development.

Moreover, as I told the Parliamentary Select Committee on Energy on 29 January, the Secretary of State is now putting in hand discussions with a view to implementing a Scottish renewables obligation (SRO) requiring Scottish Power and Scottish Hydro-Electric to increase the amount of electricity they purchase from renewable sources. The form and size of the order have yet to be determined, but the intention is to make a series of orders over a period of years. Any SRO will have clearly defined objectives which will take fully into account the Scottish context within which it will operate.

Armed Assaults

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each police force in Scotland the number of armed assaults for each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 February 1992]: Information on assaults involving weapons other than firearms is not collected centrally. The number of assaults in which a firearm was alleged to have been used by police force area is given in the following table.

Scotland, 1980 to 1990

Police Force	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990

Notes:

1. Assaults include the categories homicide, attempted murder, serious assault, sexual assault and petty assault.
2. Firearms include imitation firearms and crossbows.

Imitation Firearms

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest figures he has on the number of armed robberies in which imitation guns were used.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1992]: This information is contained in table 4 of the Scottish Office statistical bulletin CRJ/1991/2 "Recorded Crimes and Offences Involving Firearms, Scotland 1990", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to curb the sale of imitation guns; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1992]: The firearms consultative committee has recently considered this matter and has put recommendations to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. These recommendations include extending the range of offences relating to the misuse of firearms and ensuring that in future the packaging of such weapons carries a warning about offences and penalties relating to their use. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is looking afresh at the law regarding replicas in the light of the recommendations put to him by the committee.

Punt-Gunning

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many black powder licences were issued in each of the last three years for the purpose of punt-gunning.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1992]: This information is not available; punt-gunning is not common in Scotland.

Road Construction

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost of building a mile of (a) dual carriageway and (b) motorway at current prices; and what moneys he has allocated to current (i) dual carriageway and (ii) motorway construction in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 February 1992]: The average total estimated cost per mile of schemes currently under construction or completed in the last six years at 1991-92 prices is detailed, by category, together with the relevant predicted expenditure in 1991-92. It should be noted that cost of building can vary widely depending on the nature of the terrain through which a road passes, bridgeworks and other structures required etc.

Classification	£ million Average cost per mile	1991-92 predicted expenditure
Dual carriageway	3·3	1·5
Dual 2 lane motorway (rural)	7·0	7·3
Dual 3 lane motorway (rural)	8·0	49·3

AIDS

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many non-haemophiliacs in Scotland who have contracted HIV as a result of national health service blood/tissue transfers (a), remain alive, (b) have developed AIDS and remain alive and (c) have developed AIDS and have died.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 February 1992]: There have been 12 reported cases of HIV infected persons in Scotland as a result of blood or tissue transfers from NHS sources. Of these 12, six have progressed to AIDS and three of these have died.

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what authority the chairman of Foresterhill hospital NHS trust may intervene in the management of the hospital laundry on the Foresterhill site prior to 1 April.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 6 February 1992]: The Foresterhill NHS trust was established in January and becomes operational on 1 April. Whilst the trust board has no current day-to-day responsibility for the running of the hospitals it clearly makes sense for there to be close liaison between Grampian health board and the trust board on issues which are likely to have a bearing on matters which will affect the trust after April.

Health Boards (Financing)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial allocations he has made to health boards for 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has allocated £2,709·2 million to health boards to meet their expenditure commitment on hospital and community health services in 1992-93. The figure includes £2,480·5 million to meet gross recurrent expenditure commitments —£2,451·6 million net—and £228·7 million to meet gross capital expenditure commitments. In addition the Common Services Agency has been allocated £135·9 million.

The allocation taken with health boards' own cash-releasing efficiency savings gives an increase in available resources of 10·04 per cent. and 10·06 per cent. for the Common Services Agency. It amounts to an extra £230·4 million for health boards in Scotland.

The revenue resources have been made available to health boards as purchasers of services and they will negotiate contracts with provider units for the services which their resident population needs.

The gross capital amount available to boards and trusts represents a 7·27 per cent. increase over 1991-92. Within this amount capital allocations to health boards will continue the high level of investment in recent years in health building projects and the existing estate. Every board will have the resources to begin at least one new building project in some cases many more. Substantial investment will be made in major hospital projects now under construction including the Royal Cornhill hospital in Grampian, the Perth royal infirmary, Tayside, the Western Isles hospital in Stornoway, the West Fife district general hospital phase 2 in Dunfermline, the spinal injuries unit at the Southern general hospital, Glasgow and Udston hospital in Lanarkshire. It will also provide the resources to progress new hospital developments at Oban, Campbeltown, Elgin, Peterhead and Crieff, a new maternity unit for Glasgow, a new acute hospital for South Lanarkshire, the redevelopment for Hairmyres hospital in Lanarkshire, the acquisition of a site for the new teaching hospital in Edinburgh, mental health developments in Inverness and for improvements to GP surgeries in the highlands and islands. The allocations also include resources for computer development.

Details of individual board allocations are contained in the table.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

House Repossessions

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the number of court orders for house repossession in the area covering the Crewe and Nantwich constituency for the years 1979-80, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

The Attorney-General: The Crewe and Nantwich constituency is covered by Crewe county court. The figures for the number of orders made on mortgage possession actions for the year 1979-80 are not available. The table shows the number of actions entered and orders made in Crewe county court for the years 1990-91 and the first three quarters of 1991-92. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all the orders made will have resulted in the execution of warrants of possession. At this stage the 1991-92 figures are provisional and therefore liable to revision in the future.

Mortgage possession actions at Crewe county court

	Actions entered	Orders made
April 1990 to March 1991	290	175
January 1991 to December 1991	325	206

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General how many mortgage repossession orders have been granted by the courts covering the city of Nottingham in each year since 1978.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 6 February 1992 at column 248.

Derek Bentley

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General what action the Lord Chancellor has taken in respect of papers relating to the case of Derek Bentley; and if he will make a statement on his policy regarding making the papers available to the public.

The Attorney-General: The Metropolitan police file on the Bentley case held by the Public Record Office is closed for 75 years under a Lord Chancellor's instrument, made under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958. Two excerpts from the Home Office file are likewise closed for 75 years; the file as a whole will not be 30 years old until 1996. The court file is awaiting transfer to the Public Record Office and will be open to inspection on transfer. Questions of access to records which are subject to extended closure under the Public Records Act, or which are not yet 30 years old, are the responsibility of the originating department.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Correspondence

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington can expect a response from the Minister for Roads and Traffic to his letter of 29 September 1991, requesting a reply to the deputation he received from Shrewley parish council.

Mr. Chope: I have written to my hon. Friend.

Driving Tests, Portsmouth

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average waiting time for a driving test in Portsmouth.

Mr. Chope: I am asking the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency to write to my hon. Friend direct.

Drivers (Eyesight)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to ensure that motorists meet the Department's eyesight requirements.

Mr. Chope: All drivers are required to pass the statutory number plate eyesight test at the start of their driving test. They are required to meet this standard at all times when driving. Drivers aged 70 or over are required to renew their driving licences at regular intervals, and at each renewal to certify that they meet the eyesight standard. The police have powers to stop and test drivers whom they believe have defective eyesight. There are about 300 prosecutions for eyesight offences each year.

Roads (Leicester)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated total cost of (i) the A46/A47 link road and (ii) the Leicester eastern district distributor road.

Mr. Chope: Both these schemes are the responsibility of the local highway authority, Leicestershire county council.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he received a copy of the kenwood proposals for the Leicester eastern bypass; and if he will instruct the Department's consultants to discuss the kenwood proposals with interested parties.

Mr. Chope: Proposals for an eastern bypass of Leicester were received from a Mr. Henwood in 1987. We have no plans to discuss them with other parties.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he first received representations regarding the Leicester eastern bypass; what are the expected dates for (a) the start and (b) completion of the Leicester eastern bypass; and what is the total estimated cost of the Leicester eastern bypass.

Mr. Chope: The first correspondence about Leicester eastern bypass following the inclusion of the scheme in the national roads programme was received in summer 1989. Subject to the identification of a viable scheme, the availability of funds and the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures, work could start around the turn of the century and would take about two years to complete. The estimated cost of the scheme is £45 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions (a) officials and (b) Ministers from his Department visited Leicester to acquaint themselves with the environmental problems associated with roads in the city.

Mr. Chope: It is not possible, without incurring disproportionate costs, to determine how many officials have visited Leicester to examine traffic-related environmental problems although officials do visit the city on a regular basis. I chaired the East Midlands regional annual consultative committee in Leicester on 17 December last year.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commission an independent survey of the traffic flows of eastern Leicester, relating to both the eastern distributor road and the Leicester eastern bypass.

Mr. Chope: The Department is already assessing traffic flows in connection with its Leicester eastern bypass scheme. This assessment will take account of the effect of other road proposals in the area.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Leicester western bypass was first proposed; in which years consultation and design took place; and what was the estimated cost of the bypass.

Mr. Chope: The Leicester western bypass was added to the national roads programme in 1976. Public consultation took place in 1978 and 1979. Design of the scheme has been a continuous process up to the invitation of construction tenders last month. The scheme is currently estimated to cost £87 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present traffic flow on the distributor road network in Leicester.

Mr. Chope: The distributor road network in Leicester is the responsibility of the local highway authority, Leicestershire county council.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has only three data systems with external links or commitments to supply information to which data protection provisions also apply. They are:

the register of drivers and vehicles maintained by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, from which information is currently supplied to the police for law enforcement in accordance with existing registrations under the Data Protection Act 1984;

the traffic commissioners record of licensed goods operators, to which the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, the Vehicle Inspectorate Agency and the Customs and Excise drugs intelligence unit have access for law enforcement and road safety purposes in accordance with existing registrations under the Data Protection Act 1984; the record of licensed public service vehicle operators currently under development which will operate under identical data protection registrations as that for goods vehicle operators.

In addition the traffic commissioners have access to the vehicle inspectorate's roadworthiness and enforcement database for road safety and law enforcement purposes.

The Department periodically reviews both the scope of and the means by which protected data is transferred to other agencies. The purpose for any external data request is considered carefully and the Data Protection Registrar would be consulted before any change in registration purposes implemented.

DVLC (Vehicle Registrations)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) heavy goods vehicles and (b) vehicles in total were registered with the DVLC in each year since 1980; how many (i) motor cars and (ii) heavy goods vehicles are currently registered for addresses in the east midlands region; and what is his estimate for the total number of (1) motor cars and (2) heavy goods vehicles in Great Britain.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows:

Thousands

Year	Heavy Goods Vehicles	Total Vehicles
1980	475	19,200
1981	451	19,347
1982	436	19,762
1983	436	20,209
1984	437	20,765
1985	432	21,157
1986	435	21,699
1987	444	22,152
1988	462	23,202
1989	478	24,196
1990	460	24,673

East Midlands Region: 1990

Thousands

Motor Cars	Heavy Goods Vehicles
1,403	37

It is forecast that the number of vehicles of body type car in Great Britain in 2000 will be in the range of 24 to 26 million.

My Department does not forecast the number of heavy goods vehicles, but it forecasts that HGV traffic in 2000 will be 15 to 27 per cent. higher than in 1990.

Seat Belts

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 632, what steps he has taken to obtain the agreement of the European Community to compulsory three point belts for rear centre seating on all saloon motor vehicles.

Mr. Chope: Negotiations are still continuing in the European Community on dates for the fitment of these point belts for rear outer seats in new cars. Requiring three point belts in rear centre seats would be technically complex, would take time to develop and, would be unlikely to secure agreement. The quickest and most effective way forward is for manufacturers voluntarily to introduce three point belts for rear centre seats wherever technically possible.

Transport Supplementary Credit Approvals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the amount of transport supplementary credit approvals (a) applied for and (b) granted to Leicestershire county council in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope: Supplementary credit approvals were first introduced in the 1990-91 transport supplementary grant settlement. The figures are:

	Bid £ million	Granted £ million
1990-91	0	0·081
1991-92	0	0·944
1992-93	1·163	1·312

Travers Morgan

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the contracts let by his Department to Travers Morgan since 1979.

Mr. Chope: This information is available only at disproportionate cost.

New Roads

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the considerations taken into account when proposing new roads.

Mr. Chope: The Government's objectives, as set out in the 1989 White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" are:

to assist economic growth by reducing transport costs;
to improve the environment by removing through traffic from unsuitable roads in towns and villages;
to enhance road safety.

Taxi Drivers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what appeal procedure is available to a taxi driver who is considered not to be a fit and proper person to hold a taxi licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Any person who is aggrieved at the decision of a licensing authority to refuse, suspend or revoke a hackney carriage (taxi) driver licence for any reason has a right of appeal as follows:

In London

The appeal should be made under section 17 of the Transport Act 1985 to either the licensing authority (the Assistant Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis) for reconsideration; or to a magistrates' court.

An unsuccessful appeal to the assistant commissioner does not preclude an appeal to a Magistrates' court.

Outside London

In the case of councils who license under Part II of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 the appeal should be made to the magistrates court under section 59 of that Act.

For councils who have not adopted the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 and only license under the Town Police Clauses Act 1847, appeals should be made to the crown Court under Section 7(1)(a) of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act 1890.

Any appeal to a court must be within 21 days of the licensing authority's decision.

As far as I am aware in general this system works satisfactorily.

London Taxis (Wheelchairs)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he is giving to ending the requirements that each new London taxi is accessible to wheelchair users and that by 2000 all London taxis will be accessible.

Mr. Freeman: None.

The requirement of wheelchair access to London taxis was introduced at the instigation of the Department of Transport after extensive research. The availability of such taxis is already making a major contribution to the independent mobility of large numbers of disabled people.

A6

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his intention that the A6 should become a strategic alternative to the M1 motorway.

Mr. Chope: The A6 is already a strategic route within the national network of trunk roads.

Speed Limits

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce speed limits of 20 mph in areas immediately adjacent to schools.

Mr. Chope: The Road Traffic Act 1991 makes provision for variable speed limits. My Department will be mounting trials involving the setting of 20 mph speed limits outside schools at the times when children are arriving or leaving. These trials will provide a basis for guidance to local authorities on the establishment of such limits.

Grant Projects

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the projects receiving transport support grant in Darlington since 1979, together with the amounts concerned.

Mr. Chope: Since 1979 three schemes have received transport supplementary grant in Darlington district. They are:

	£ million
A6072 Heighington Bypass	1·8
A67 Teesside Link and Airport Access	6·3
A68 Darlington Cross Town Route Stage 1	5·7

The Heighington bypass was completed in 1983 and the Teesside link is now under construction.

Bus Use (London)

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on the allocation of resources for measures to promote bus use in London.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to announce the allocation of £500,000 of supplementary credit approvals in 1992-93 for bus priority measures in the boroughs of Haringey, Newham, Camden and Ealing. Table 1 sets out the detailed allocations. Further resources are being held for possible allocation to other schemes in south and west London and Tower Hamlets when details have been considered in respect of firm proposals.

Table 1
Local authority supplementary credit approvals for bus priority measures in London 1992-93

London boroughs	£'000
Haringey	100
Newham	200
Camden	100
Ealing	100

Rail Electrification

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the percentage of their mainline railway networks which have been electrified for each country in the EC.

Mr. Freeman: UIC figures for the percentage of the mainline railway network electrified for each country are as follows:

	Per cent.
Belgium (SNCB)	65
Denmark (DSB)	10
France (SNCF)	36
Germany (DR/DB)	38
Great Britain (BR)	27
Greece (CH)	0
Holland (NS)	69
Italy (FS)	59
Luxembourg (CFL)	72
Portugal (CP)	15
Republic of Ireland (CIE)	2
Spain (RENFE)	51

Norsea

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the prototype launching gear involved in the accident on the Norsea; when this launching gear was fitted; whether similar launching gear is fitted on any other vessel; and when the marine accident investigations branch inquiry will be completed.

Mr. McLoughlin: These matters will be addressed during the investigation being carried out by the marine accident investigation branch. It is far too early to say when the comprehensive investigation into this accident will be completed.

Severn Tunnel

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway workers have been arrested in connection with the recent Severn tunnel railway accident; if he will place in the Library a copy of the evidence submitted to the British Rail inquiry; and what guidelines he has issued to the British transport police on co-operation with internal British Rail inquiries.

Mr. Freeman: The British Transport police (BTP) have informed me that they arrested three British Rail staff in connection with their inquiries into the Severn tunnel train accident. No charges have been made and the staff have been released on bail pending enquiries.

Publication of evidence to an internal British Rail inquiry is a matter for BR.

We are not aware of any lack of co-operation between the BTP and BR in their respective investigations into this incident. BTP are keeping HM railway inspectorate fully informed.

Life-saving Equipment

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the procedures which govern the testing of prototype life-saving equipment on (a) operational ferries and (b) other vessels.

Mr. McLoughlin: The procedures for testing the life-saving equipment on all merchant ships are prescribed in the Merchant Shipping (Life-Saving Appliances) Regulations 1986, as amended, and described in detail in the Department's publication, "Survey of Life-Saving Appliances; volume 2". Prototype, modified and production appliances are subject to the appropriate strength and operational tests to ensure that they are safe and will be effective in service.

Rail Electrification

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has met representatives of Tayside and Grampian regional councils to discuss the financing of the electrification of the main east coast line between Edinburgh, Dundee and Aberdeen; if he plans to do so in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Ministers have not met representatives from Tayside and Grampian regional councils to discuss the electrification of the Edinburgh to Aberdeen line. The councils should approach British Rail, as it is for BR to bring forward proposals if it considers there is a case for electrification and that it merits sufficient priority within its investment programme.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total mileage of the United Kingdom's mainline railway network; how many of these miles have been electrified to date; and how many miles are currently programmed to be electrified.

Mr. Freeman: InterCity mainline services currently operate over 3,328 route miles of which 1,1[illegible] route miles are electrified. InterCity has not put forw[illegible] any further plans for mainline electrification.

Fire Engines

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what income has been raised through road fund licences on vintage and private fire engines since exemption from such tax was removed.

Mr. Chope: The information requested on the amount of duty collected from previously exempt fire engines is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

There are however approximately 1,300 such vehicles identified prior to the change. If all of these relicenced for the full year in the private and light goods (PLG) taxation class, the revenue raised would amount to £130,000.

Cargo Straps

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proposals he has to introduce regulatory control of cargo straps used by road haulage vehicles;

(2) how many road accidents each year are attributable to failures of road haulage cargo straps.

Mr. Chope [holding answer Friday 7 February 1992]: There are no national statistics which identify the role of insecure loads in accidents. A recent study, however, estimated that nationally fewer than 30 fatal accidents each year involve insecure loads. It is uncertain how many of these involve cargo strap failure. The most important factor in reducing insecure load accidents is the configuration and type of restraint systems. A revised code of practice dealing with this is to be issued for consultation shortly.

Vehicle Movements (Greater London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has of the likely number of daily vehicle movements in Greater London for the current year, 1995, 1997 and 2000; and what are the comparable figures for 1990, 1987 and 1980.

Mr. Chope [holding answer Monday 10 February 1992]: My Department does not have either forecasts or past estimates available in the form requested. Surveys indicate an overall traffic growth rate for Greater London of about 1 per cent. per year through the 1980s. Traffic growth was lower in inner London than in the outer areas. Traffic forecasts for London alone are not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Personal Information

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to allow a parent or student to consent to, or be aware of, those uses and disclosures of personal information not obvious at the time the parent or student provides the information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Guidance to schools on the implications of the Data Protection Act, issued last November, includes information on the data protection principles.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what is the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The Department's information systems are concerned wholly with the administration of the Department's business. It has no systems where information is made generally available which is not otherwise publicly available. Where appropriate such systems are registered under the Data Protection Act.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those full inspections which have taken place in relation to grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Eggar: To date there have been no full inspections of grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he intends to use for the publication of inspection reports on grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Eggar: In all cases where an inspection is planned by Her Majesty's inspectorate to lead to a published report, my right hon. and learned Friend has published the reports. The same principle will be applied to any reports on grant-maintained schools.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in North Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1978 and May 1980.

Mr. Eggar: Most Government support for expenditure on education in North Yorkshire is paid to North Yorkshire county council as unhypothecated revenue support grant. In 1991-92, the Department is making available specific grant to North Yorkshire local education authority of some £3,168,000 through its programme of grants for education support and training, to support expenditure on implementing the national curriculum, local management of schools and a number of other national priorities; and of some £83,000 to support the education of children of travellers, refugees and other displaced persons. There were no similar specific grants between 1978 and 1980. The Department also pays grant to North Yorkshire local education authority to cover the cost of mandatory awards to students undertaking higher education. The Department additionally pays grant to the University Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, which support higher education in North Yorkshire.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Department utilises a wide range of information technology systems to provide support in the conduct of its business. A number of these use information from external sources, both within the United Kingdom and in Europe. This information is often commercially available, and increasingly it is available electronically. Furthermore, the Department uses IT systems to provide modern communication facilities such as electronic mail.

Although much of the Departmental information is not of a personal nature and therefore not subject to the Data Protection Act, in those instances where personal information forms any part of an IT system its use is registered as required under the Data Protection Act. Registration information is available from the Data Protection Registrar. The Department's central personnel system is computerised, and data are exchanged between this system and the HM Treasury pay system at Chessington.

Data Protection (European Directive)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many meetings he has had with representatives from organisations about the contents of the proposed European directives on data protection and in relation to data protection and communications; how many meetings were with organisations representing the interests of the data users or the telecommunications industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The responsibility for these directives falls mainly to the Home Office, although the Department of Trade and Industry lead on the directive on data protection in telecommunications and the decision on information security. There have been no meetings with DTI Ministers specifically on this issue, but regular representations have been received at official level.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what effect his Department estimates a general agreement on tariffs and trade settlement will have upon clothing and textile employment in the respective regions of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 1 July 1991 to a question from the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), at column 20. Professor Silberston did not attempt a regional breakdown of the effect on employment of ending the multi-fibre arrangement, although he did give detailed consideration to those factors, such as regional levels of employment opportunities, which appeared to be relevant. A successful outcome to the GATT Uruguay round would include strengthened rules and disciplines and increased multilateral market access: this, taken together with the 10-year transitional period for phasing out textile restraints, should mitigate the impact on employment in the industry.

Beer Complaints

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many complaints he has received from members of the public in Scotland concerning froth on beer.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 10 February 1992]: None of the recent complaints I have received has come from members of the public in Scotland. However, surveys by trading standards departments in Scotland have shown many instances in which licensees served less than a full measure of liquid beer.

Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress with his Department's review of the operation of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: The issues arising from the review of the operation of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 are being carefully considered. If any changes are considered to be appropriate, the Government will consult with interested parties.

ENERGY

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in North Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department does not keep information in a suitable form to carry out the required analysis.

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the oral answer of 4 February by the Minister for Defence Procurement, Official Report, column 119, how much extra funding Her Majesty's Government will make available for nuclear safeguards inspection under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty provisions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Negotiations on safeguards agreements between the International Atomic Energy Agency and the former republics of the Soviet Union have not yet begun, and provision for safeguards has not been made in the agency's budget. IAEA activities in Iraq are funded by the special commission. The needs of the safeguards system will naturally occupy a central part of the discussions on the agency's budget.

THE ARTS

Data Protection Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what data information systems his office has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Office of Arts and Libraries has no major data information system of its own; it has access to the system of the Cabinet Office/Office of the Minister for the Civil Service, with which it is closely associated. It also has a number of stand-alone personal computers to help meet the functions of the Department. My office has not been consulted with a view to taking part in any other data information systems.

There is no current or planned link to the police national computer. An electronic mail link is being planned by the Cabinet Office to operate between each of its major networks and to other Government Departments.

The 1984 Data Protection Act applies, and registrations have been made where appropriate.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Walden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of mortgage tax relief in 1991.

Mr. Maude: Tax relief is calculated for the fiscal year. Provisional estimates of the cost of mortgage interest tax relief for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are £7·7 billion and £6·1 billion respectively.

VAT (Bloodstock)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning representations to the European Commission on the Irish VAT rate for bloodstock.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The European Commission, on its own initiative, is currently examining the present practices in Ireland in relation to VAT and bloodstock.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in 1992-93, and in a full year, of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (a) £9,000, (b) £10,000, (c) £11,000, (d) £12,000, (e) £13,000, (f) £14,000, (g) £15,000 and (h) £16,000 giving the number of people affected in each case, distinguishing between (i) basic-rate taxpayers and (ii) higher-rate taxpayers, and giving the number who brought into higher rate tax in each case, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that at 1991-92 levels of income the introduction of the upper limits specified would yield the following:

Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs £	Yield in full year £ million
9,000	930
10,000	590
11,000	440
12,000	360
13,000	310
14,000	270
15,000	240
16,000	210

The number of people who would be affected are as follows:

Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs £	Basic rate taxpayers and non taxpayers (000's)	Higher rate taxpayers (000's)
9,000	1,090	555
10,000	250	385
11,000	55	215
12,000	30	135
13,000	20	100
14,000	15	75
15,000	10	65
16,000	10	55

Fewer than 5,000 basic rate taxpayers would become higher rate taxpayers.

The effect on receipts in the first year would depend on the administrative arrangements for applying a limit.

It is not possible to provide detailed estimates for 1992-93.

The estimates do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such a limit.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the average tax allowances and reliefs for those with gross incomes (a) under £10,000, (b) between £10,000 and £20,000, (c) between £20,000 and £30,000, (d) between £30,000 and £40,000, (e) between £40,000 and £50,000, (f) between £50,000 and £60,000, (g) between £60,000 and £70,000, (h) between £70,000 and £80,000 and (i) above £80,000.

Mr. Maude: Latest estimates for taxpayers in 1991-92 are as follows:

Gross income £ per year	Amount of tax reliefs and allowances set against income £
0-10,000	4,200
10,000-20,000	5,900
20,000-30,000	7,000
30,000-40,000	7,800
40,000-50,000	8,400
50,000-60,000	8,900
60,000-70,000	9,500
70,000-80,000	9,900
Over 80,000	13,300
Average	5,500

Taxation

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people with gross incomes of over £100,000 pay an income tax bill of less than (a) 35 per cent., (b) 30 per cent., (c) 25 per cent., (d) 20 per cent., (e) 15 per cent., (f) 10 per cent. and (g) 5 per cent. of their gross incomes;

(2) how many higher-rate taxpayers pay an income tax bill of less than (a) 35 per cent., (b) 30 per cent., (c) 25 per cent., (d) 20 per cent., (e) 15 per cent., (f) 10 per cent. and (g) 5 per cent. of their gross incomes.

Mr. Maude: Available information for 1991-92 is as follows:

Estimated number of taxpayers (thousands)

Income tax liability as a percentage of gross income[1]	Gross income over £80,000	Higher rate taxpayers
Less than 35 per cent.	110	1,590
Less than 30 per cent.	20	1,420
Less than 25 per cent.	—	1,000
Less than 20 per cent.	—	300
Less than 15 per cent.	—	—
Less than 10 per cent.	—	—
Less than 5 per cent.	—	—

[1] Total income for income tax purposes.

I regret that a reliable analysis of taxpayers with incomes over £100,000 is not available.

ENVIRONMENT

Air Quality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has of breathing air quality levels falling below European Community safety standards; in what respect, what areas and for what duration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the concentrations of various air pollutants is collected by monitoring networks operated on behalf of my Department. The European Community has set air quality standards in Directives covering smoke and sulphur dioxide, lead, and nitrogen dioxide. Since 1988-89, there have been only the following exceedences of the Directives' limit values:

1989

Lead limit value exceeded in Walsall (21 weeks over the annual mean concentration limit value);

1989-90

Smoke/sulphur dioxide limit values exceeded at two sites in Belfast (i) 15 days (sulphur dioxide and (ii) eight days (sulphur dioxide) and six days (smoke); at Newry and Mourne, 17 days (smoke); and at Sunderland, 12 days (smoke);

Nitrogen dioxide directive breached in west London (27 more hours over the hourly average concentration than allowed by the directive (175));

1990-91

Smoke/sulphur dioxide limit values exceeded at three sites in Belfast, (i) eight days (smoke), (ii) seven days (smoke) and (iii) 12 days (sulphur dioxide) and nine days (smoke).

The breach in west London was merely a technical breach caused by local vehicle emissions from an indoor source adjacent to the monitoring probe. The measured air quality was therefore not representative of human exposure in the area.

Leigh Barton

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many years Leigh Barton, near Churstow, has been closed to the public; and when it is planned to be reopened.

Mr. Yeo: Opening Leigh Barton to the general public has not yet proved possible due to the extensive repair work which was necessary following its acquisition. However, interested groups have been allowed supervised visits since 1986. English Heritage is currently looking at the possibility of a beneficial use which would contribute to completion of the repair work and be compatible with some future public access.

Orimulsion

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment from whom the hon. Member for Dover is to receive a reply to letters sent to his Department and to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution during the current session regarding work done by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in connection with Orimulsion.

Mr. Baldry: I have replied to three letters in the current session in connection with Orimulsion. These were sent to my hon. Friend on 18 November 1991, 16 December 1991 and 3 February 1992.

Ozone-depleting Chemicals

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those applications for which Her Majesty's Government considers chlorofluorocarbons are still needed and where substitutes are not yet available; when it is expected that each such CFC-producing application can be phased out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: CFCs are still needed for some refrigeration, air conditioning and solvent applications, and for certain foams and medical aerosol products. The Government have proposed a 1996 phase-out for supply of new CFCs, except for any essential uses for which the Montreal protocol parties agree that alternatives are not available at that time.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek an emergency meeting of the Montreal protocol so that an immediate ban on all ozone-depleting chemicals can be introduced.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ask for an emergency meeting of the Montreal protocol to discuss the recent data on the Arctic and northern hemisphere ozone hole; and if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Trippier: The Montreal protocol parties are already due to meet in November this year and will consider whether the controls on ozone-depleting substances should be tightened. Official level negotiations begin on 6 April. I proposed to the EC Environment Council last December that the protocol's phase-out dates be brought forward to 1995 for halons and 1996 for other ozone-depleting substances, an acceleration ranging from four to nine years. As far as I am aware, the United Kingdom is so far the only country to have made firm proposals to strengthen the protocol. An immediate CFC phase-out is not practicable—for many applications, such as food preservation, insulating foam and medical aerosols, replacement technologies are not yet adequately developed.

Community Charge (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost involved in issuing the 145,000 summonses served by Liverpool city council in the cases of alleged community charge non-payers; and what redress is open to recipients who have paid their community charge.

Mr. Key: My Department does not collect information on the costs incurred by local authorities in taking enforcement action against non-payers of the community charge. Following the issue of a summons, the magistrates court may grant the local authority a liability order against an individual only if it is satisfied that his community charge is payable and remains unpaid.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the number of jobs in the area covered by Leeds development corporation at its inception, and on the latest available figures.

Mr. Key: The number of jobs in the area covered by the Leeds development corporation is updated annually with effect from 1 April by the development corporation. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities said in his reply of 18 October 1991 at column 283, a total of 31,871 people were employed in the Leeds development corporation's area at the time of inception. The latest available figure is 37,733 as at March 1991.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Leeds development corporation expects to publish planning proposals for the East street area of Leeds 9; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Proposals for the north side of East street are contained in the Marsh lane/Saxton lane and the Low Fold planning frameworks which were published by Leeds development corporation in February 1990, following a period of public consultation. Proposals for the south side of East street are shown in the draft development framework for Clarence dock, which was published for public consultation on 27 January 1992.

Manchester City Council

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indemnify Manchester city council against any costs incurred as a result of successful prosecutions in relation to failure to fulfil its statutory duty to provide adaptations for disabled people.

Mr. Yeo: A local authority is open to legal challenge if it fails to fulfil its statutory duty to provide house adaptations for people with disabilities. There is no express power to compensate an authority for the financial consequences of a successful prosecution.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the letter of 4 February from the chairman of the Manchester city council housing committee about funding for adaptations for disabled occupants of council-owned accommodation.

Mr. Yeo: The Secretary of State has received a letter on this subject from the chair of the housing committee of Manchester city council, and I am considering what response should be made.

Estate Action

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been made available under the estate action programme; how many schemes have been or are being supported; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The estate action programme has now passed an important milestone—over £1 billion has been allocated to or earmarked for about 1,000 schemes since the programme began in 1986.

On 11 February 1991, the programme was relaunched with tougher criteria. We are now looking for a strategic approach which promotes comprehensive regeneration, an effective partnership between local authorities, tenants and the private sector, and housing investment which complements other urban policies.

We are backing this with substantially increased resources—in 1992-93, the estate action budget will rise to £364 million. I have been encouraged by the extent to which the approach we are advocating is reflected in the schemes put forward by authorities for inclusion in next year's programme.

Local Government (Structure)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to publish CSL Group Ltd.'s report on guidance to the Local Government Commission on assessing costs and benefits of change in the structure of local government.

Mr. Portillo: I have placed copies of the report in the Library. I have today sent copies of it to the local authority associations and to the Audit Commission, with a request for comments by 13 March.

Urban Programme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table indicating for each year of its operation, the total allocation from the Department of the Environment for the urban programme expressed both as net expenditure at current prices and as a percentage of total urban block expenditure; and if he will indicate, for each of the next three years, his best estimate of total urban programme allocation, expressed both as net expenditure and as a percentage total of urban block expenditure.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 4 February 1992]: My Department's urban group of programmes has evolved during the 1980s from the original urban and derelict land programmes to include urban development corporations, city grant, city action teams and most recently city challenge. These various policy instruments have been developed to tackle the complex range of economic, environmental and social problems in inner city areas.

The urban programme figures include my Department's outturn/provision only. Some variations arise from different arrangements for recording other Government Departments' contributions over the period.

The figures are as follows:

Year	Urban programme provision-outturn £ million 1991-92 prices	Urban programme as percentage of urban block
1994-95	plan 238	30
1993-94	plan 232	29
1992-93	plan 245	30
1991-92	plan 242	27
1990-91	242	25
1989-90	259	29

Year	Urban programme provision-outturn £ million 1991-92 prices	Urban programme as percentage of urban block
1988-89	277	41
1987-88	326	51
1986-87	331	55
1985-86	366	58
1984-85	291	55
1983-84	261	50
1982-83	268	57
1981-82	168	58
1980-81	220	79
1979-80	193	80
1978-79	128	70
1977-78	12	40
1976-77	12	55
1975-76	16	100
1974-75	24	100
1973-74	7	100

Figures before 1973-74 are not readily available.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he took part in party-political activities in addition to official duties on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1991.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 7 February 1992]: My wife and I visited Hong Kong at our own expense in September 1991. We stayed with the governor. I took the opportunity to vist the PSA headquarters.

Wild Bird Trade

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on United Kingdom participation in the conference in Japan in March 1992 on the wild bird trade.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 10 February 1992]: A number of proposals concerning the wild bird trade have been submitted for consideration at the conference of the parties to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora to be held in Kyota, Japan, next month. We are considering these carefully, in consultation with our scientific advisers and other interested organisations. I will make a further statement in due course.

WALES

Toll Bridges

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the figures for the (a) annual income and cost and (b) capital debt outstanding for toll bridges in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Cleddau bridge is the only toll bridge in Wales for which we have published accounts. The figures are:

For 1990-91	£ million
1. Annual income (from tolls)	1·24
2. Annual cost:
Operating Expenses	0·39
Debt and Other Charges	0·49
Total Expenditure	0·88
Outstanding debt at 31 March 1991	5·78

Fishing

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will approve the application for byelaws to regulate fishing for sea fish in coastal areas, including the Severn and Dee estuaries submitted to him by the Welsh region of the National Rivers Authority in June 1991, in time to provide protection for migratory fish during the 1992 fishing season; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A decision on whether to approve the byelaws proposed by the National Rivers Authority will be taken shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Moneyreagh Primary School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the enrolment in each of the most recent five years at Moneyreagh primary school; what plans there are to replace the temporary accommodation at this school with permanent accommodation; what provision is being made at this school for the increasing population at Moneyreagh; what proposals he has for nursery education at Moneyreagh; and if he will make a statement about education opportunities at Moneyreagh.

Dr. Mawhinney: The enrolments at Moneyreagh primary school in the last five years were as follows:

Year	Number
1988	134
1989	136
1990	133
1991	129
1992	136

Note: The enrolment figures given are for January in each year.

The school's approved enrolment and maximum admissions numbers for September 1992 are 171 and 26 respectively and are considered sufficient to meet the immediate demand for places. The position will be kept under review in light of enrolment trends; at present, the South-Eastern education and library board has no plans to increase the accommodation at the school or to replace the temporary accommodation.

The provision of nursery education at Moneyreagh is, in the first instance, a matter for the South Eastern education and library board; to date no proposals have been made by the board.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Paymaster-General is satisfied that the school is able to provide appropriate educational opportunities for children in the area.

Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual salary of the part-time chairman of Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.

Mr. Needham: £13,385.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: All relevant IT systems in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments are registered under the Data Protection Act and are therefore subject to this legislation. Each Department has registered for various purposes, and disclosure is addressed within each register entry.

For security reasons, it would be inappropriate to reveal which systems are linked to the police national computer or to other systems.

Belfast Airport

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the new freight cargo centre at Belfast international airport.

Mr. Needham: £8,175,500.

National Insurance

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are liable to pay national insurance contributions who earn between (a) the lower earnings limit and (b) the 1991 equivalent of the 1980 level of the lower earnings limit, revalued in line with earnings.

Mr. Hanley: If the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions had been revalued in line with the increase in earnings since 1980, its present level would be £64·00. It is estimated that 15,000 people in Northern Ireland have weekly earnings between this figure and the current lower earnings limit of £52·00.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in 1991-92 are liable to pay national insurance contributions who have earnings between the lower earnings limit and £64·80 per week in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: It is estimated that, on average, some 15,000 people in Northern Ireland with weekly earnings between £52·00, the current lower earnings limit, and £64·80 will be liable to pay national insurance contributions in 1991-92.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons (Destruction)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what methods are used for the destruction of chemical weapons taken into custody by the special commission of the International Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Chemical weapons are not taken into custody by the International Atomic Energy Agency. The United Nations special commission in Iraq is, however, charged under Security Council resolution 687 to ensure the destruction of Iraqi chemical weapons. Good progress is being made in planning for the destruction of Iraqi stocks declared or discovered to date. The special commission's destruction advisory panel has put forward proposals for the destruction of 122 mm rockets by explosive detonation and the use of fuel thereby ignited to create a destructive fireball. The Iraqis have been asked to construct an incinerator for mustard agent destruction to designs approved by the special commission, and trials of nerve agent destruction by hydrolysis were observed at the end of January 1992 by the chemical weapons inspection team in Iraq. Careful attention is being paid to safety and environmental protection in all destruction methods considered by the special commission.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the approximate cost of the United Kingdom's military commitment in Zimbabwe for training and other purposes each year since 1981-82 (a) in cash terms and (b) at 1981-82 prices; and if he will list the percentage increase or decrease on the previous year for each year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to disclose the cost of assistance to individual countries.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the approximate number of United Kingdom service men operating in Zimbabwe for training and other purposes each year since 1981-82.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of United Kingdom service men operating in Zimbabwe (excluding the defence adviser and his staff) since 1982 are as follows:

	Numbers
1982	74
1983	104
1984	58
1985	60
1986	63
1987	50
1988	43
1989	43
1990	61
1991	58
1992	56

All figures are at 31 March except for 1982 (31 September) and 1992 (31 January). Figures for 1981 are unavailable.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the presence of United Kingdom service men in Zimbabwe for training and other purposes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's military assistance programme in Zimbabwe aims to contribute to the maintenance of stability in the region. Following the country's independence in 1980, a British military training team has been helping to train the Zimbabwean forces. Another team has been involved in training elements of the Mozambican forces at a base in Zimbabwe.

Both teams are in Zimbabwe at the invitation of the Zimbabwean Government.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom service men while stationed in Zimbabwe have been killed, seriously injured or wounded in the course of their military duties since 1981-82.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Antares

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary for Defence what are the reasons for the delay in the consideration of possible disciplinary action following the sinking of the fishing vessel Antares; what action he has taken to speed up the consideration; when he now expects the consideration to be concluded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The question whether there should be disciplinary proceedings is entirely the responsibility of the Commander-in-Chief Fleet. I understand that his decision will be made shortly. As these matters are still under consideration, it would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

100 (Yeomanry) Field Regiment RA

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under whose operational command 100 (Yeomanry) Field Regiment RA will come; and what will be its place within eastern district.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 1 April 1992, 100 (Yeomanry) Field Regiment RA will begin to re-role as a field howitzer 70 regiment supporting one of the British divisions of the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps under the operational command of 3 UK Division. Although administrative command will continue to be exercised through the Regimental Headquarters in London district for the time being, it is planned to move the RHQ into eastern district in the medium term.

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated net capital cost of the proposed changes in 100 (Yeomanry) Field Regiment RA.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The announced changes to 100 (Yeomanry) Field Regiment RA are part of the overall restructuring of the TA in response to major changes in its role—notably to support the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps. Detailed costings will not be available until clearer plans for locations have been made.

Iraq (Military Equipment)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall), Official Report, 4 February, column 152, what information he has as to whether any of the military equipment used by Iraq in the Gulf war and examined by the United Kingdom and its allies was (a) manufactured in, or (b) purchased from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Investigations of Iraqi military equipment recovered by the United Kingdom and the United States are continuing. Some electrical items or components of British manufacture have been found.

Military Ranges

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which ranges will be used by TA Royal Artillery batteries equipped with FH70 for (a) live and (b) dry training; and what assessment was made of the relative ease of access to such ranges by units at (i) Brighton and (ii) Bulwell.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Field howitzer 70 live firings in the United Kingdom can be conducted in training areas in Wiltshire (Salisbury plain), Wales (Sennybridge) and Northumberland (Otterburn). Dry training, at battery level, is available in East Anglia (Stanford) or in the north-west (Warcop); both areas will be used regularly by units and formations which 100 Field Regiment, RA will support in time of war. Proximity to these areas is an advantage, and access is assessed as satisfactory.

Trident

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money his Department has so far spent on the Trident programme; and how much has been contractually committed.

Mr. Alan Clark: Total expenditure for the Trident programme to the end of November 1991 was £5,074 million, and the total contractually committed £6,649 million.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in North Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1978 and May 1980.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not held in the form requested.

Regiments and Corps (Titles)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any decisions have been made regarding the titles of regiments and corps of the regular Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following titles have been approved:

The Royal Dragoon Guards (amalgamation of 4th/7th Royal Dragoon Guards and 5th Royal Inniskilling Dragoon Guards)

The Queen's Royal Hussars (The Queen's Own and Royal Irish) (amalgamation of the Queen's Own Hussars and The Queen's Royal Irish Hussars)

The King's Royal Hussars (amalgamation of the Royal Hussars (Prince of Wales' Own) and 14th/20th King's Hussars)

The Light Dragoons (amalgamation of 13th/18th Royal Hussars (Queen Mary's Own) and 15th/19th The King's Royal Hussars)

The Queen's Royal Lancers (amalgamation of 16th/5th The Queen's Royal Lancers and 17th/21st Lancers)

The Royal Logistic Corps (The Corps will form in April 1993 by the amalgamation of the Royal Corps of Transport; the Royal Army Ordnance Corps; the Royal Pioneer Corps; the Army Catering Corps; and the Postal and Courier Service, Corps of Royal Engineers; as announced in "Britain's Army for the 90s" (Cm 1595) published in July 1991).

The titles of other new regiments will be announced when decisions have been taken.

Army Districts

Mr. Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in restructuring Army districts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Wales and Western district is operational, and the new eastern district will be formed in April this year. I can now confirm that the last phase of restructuring will also take effect from April this year, when it is intended that the existing south-east and south-west districts will be amalgamated to form southern district, with its headquarters in Aldershot.

The new structure will therefore comprise five Districts —Scotland, eastern, Wales and western, Southern and London.

Implications for civilian staff employed within the new southern District will be the subject of consultation with the trade unions.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 11 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Service College

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many student places have been confirmed for (a) local authority financed brigades and (b) industrial and overseas courses at the Fire Service college for the year beginning April 1992; how many student weeks each of these two categories represents; and if he will make a statement on the financial position of the college.

Mr. John Patten: Three thousand, three hundred and forty eight places covering 13,019 student weeks have so far been confirmed for local authority fire brigades for the year from 1 April 1992. One hundred and sixty nine places covering 263 student weeks have been confirmed for the industrial and overseas sectors, others being held in reserve until the full demand from the local authority sector, the college's primary customer, is known and met. This position is consistent with the college's business plan, by which it aims to meet its expenditure wholly from income, provide high quality training and deliver good value for money.

Police Cells

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in police cells committed acts of self-injury or attempted suicide in 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Data Protection Registrar has studied the privacy implications that arise from the combination of publicly available council tax information with (a) the sale of the electoral register, (b) public extracts of the community charge register, (c) anonymised census information and (d) county court judgments; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The enforcement of the Data Protection Act 1984 is a matter for the Data Protection Registrar, the data protection tribunal and, ultimately the courts. I understand, however, that the registrar is currently studying certain data-matching issues.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what is the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Home Office has 151 systems processing personal data registered under the Data Protection Act 1984. All Home Office systems processing such data are registered under the Act and are used as described in their registration. That procedure will apply also to any new systems which may be brought into use in the future.

Electoral Registration Form

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to introduce an electoral registration form which has a statement indicating that a voter's personal data can be used and disclosed without the knowledge and consent of the voter.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. The only information taken from the electoral registration form which is published is that which is requried for the register of electors. The purpose of the electoral register is to provide a comprehensive and publicly available list of the names and addresses of those who are eligible to vote. Since the register is a public document, making the information contained in it available cannot be held to constitute a breach of confidentiality.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings he has had with representatives from organisations about the contents of the proposed European directive on data protection; how many meetings were with organisations representing the interests of data users; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Ministers have had two, and officials a number of, meetings with organisations which asked to see the Home Office. All represented data users.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress towards agreement on the proposed European directive on data protection.

Mrs. Rumbold: Discussions in the Council's working group continue. The European Parliament is considering the draft directive. The European Commission is expected to produce a revised draft in the light of the views of the European Parliament.

Data Protection (Prosecutions)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each prosecution brought under the terms of the Data Protection Act 1984 since 1987, detailing the nature of the offence, the section of the Act used, the year, and whether the prosecution was successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Prosecutions brought under the Act by the Data Protection Registrar are listed in his fifth, sixth and seventh annual reports to Parliament. Prosecutions under the Act initiated by the Director of Public Prosecutions are not separately listed.

Isobutylnitrite

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions are in force for the sale of the chemical isobutylnitrate; and if he will add it to the list of solvents known to be damaging to children.

Mr. John Patten: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the chemical known as isobutylnitrite; it is one of a group of chemicals known as alkylnitrites. Isobutylnitrite—which currently has no licit medical use—is not strictly speaking a solvent, but it can be misused by inhalation of its vapours. Sales of intoxicating substances are regulated by the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985 which makes it an offence for people such as retailers to sell or supply intoxicating substances to persons under 18 who they believe intend to misuse them. The Act has no specific list of chemicals: there is a wide range of everyday products which can be misused by inhalation. The Government have provided funding for Re-Solv, which has issued guidance leaflets to retailers advising them how to recognise signs that a young person may be misusing such substances and how to refuse to sell them. The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs has recommended against bringing alkylnitrites under the control of the misuse of drugs legislation as their use in the community does not appear to pose a serious social problem.

Malicious Communications Act 1988

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been under the Malicious Communications Act 1988 in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991.

Mr. John Patten: In England and Wales in 1989, there were 49 prosecutions under the Malicious Communications Act 1988. Information collected centrally for 1990 does not identify offences committed under this specific Act from other summary offences. 1991 data are not yet available.

Data Protection (European Directive)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the position of each of the other EC countries with respect to the content of the proposed European directive on data protection in relation to (a) the inclusion of manual files in the directive, (b) the consent requirements, (c) the inclusion of personal data held for national security purposes and (d) the proposals with respect to direct mail and profiling; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It would not be appropriate to attempt to describe the position of each member state on each of these issues. Discussion in the Council's working group has shown that some countries tend to favour the approach taken by the Commission's draft directive (SYN 287), which includes manual files and provisions for notification and consent of the data subject. Other countries, have been arguing for a directive closer to the Council of Europe's convention 108 on data processing, which applies only to computerised personal data and does not have consent provisions as such; and other countries favour an element of both approaches.

Data Protection Registrar (Briefing Materials)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the titles of the briefing materials presented to the Data Protection Registrar in relation to (a) TREVI, (b) Schengen, (c) the DNA database and (d) the new Police National Computer.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand that the Data Protection Registrar has received correspondence and documents relating to European police, immigration and customs systems, the keeping of DNA records and the new police national computer. It would not be appropriate or practicable to list correspondence and documents by title.

Drugs Seizures

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of successful seizures of illegal drugs in the past five years have been made (a) by police and (b) by customs officers.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is contained in table 2.3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of the misuse of drugs: seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1990", a copy of which is in the Library. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Crime (Tower Hamlets)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of burglaries of (a) domestic dwellings and (b) all other buildings in Tower Hamlets for each year between 1985 and 1990.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in Tower Hamlets for each year from 1985 and 1990.

Mr. John Patten: The available information for Tower Hamlets is given in the following table.

Notifiable offences recorded in Tower Hamlets 1985-90

Year	Burglary In dwelling	 Other building	Total notifiable offences
1985	[1]—	[1]—	23,967

West Indies

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Trinidad and Tobago, (b) Guyana, (c) Barbados and (d) Jamaica have (i) been admitted and (ii) been refused admittance and removed each month during the period January to December 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Passports

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms exist to enable embassies and high commissions in the United Kingdom, where they have received an application from one of their nationals for a replacement passport, to consult local police forces to establish whether a report has been received of a lost passport or other details about the applicant.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Anyone reporting a lost or stolen passport to a local police station will receive a unique reference number specific to that report. This will enable an embassy or high commission to confirm with the police force concerned that a report was made of a lost or stolen passport. No other details about an applicant would be relevant to such an inquiry.

Life Sentences (Parole)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recommendations by the Parole Board for the releases on parole or licence of prisoners serving life sentences have been (a) accepted and (b) rejected by him in each year since 1981.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the numbers of life sentence prisoners recommended as suitable for release by the Parole Board and the numbers of those recommendations not accepted by Home Secretaries is published in successive annual reports of the Parole Board. For convenience, the figures for 1981-90, which include re-releases following a period in prison after recall from a previous licence, are set out in the table. Parole Board recommendations of "suitable for release" have been for dates ranging from the immediate future to up to two and a half years ahead.

Mr. Abdul Farooq

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the post in Islamabad was advised to issue a visa to Mr. Abdul Farooq Ref. TH/14646/90, to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I shall write to the hon. Member.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Walvis Bay

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 432 regarding Walvis bay; and what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking in pursuit of this policy.

Mrs. Chalker: When voting in favour of UN Security Council resolution 432, we stated that this issue was best resolved through bilateral negotiation between the Governments of Namibia and South Africa. We have urged the South African Government to negotiate constructively, and welcome the progress made since bilateral talks commenced in March 1991.

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on his policy towards the achievement of a settlement in Angola and the representations which he is making to the parties involved.

Mrs. Chalker: We attach importance to the convening of free and fair elections in September 1992 in completion of the settlement agreed in Portugal on 31 May 1991 which ended the Angolan civil war. We have regular discussions with both sides, and are assisting in the formation of a new integrated army to help bring stability to the country.

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on his policy towards the achievement of a settlement in Mozambique and the representations which he is making to the parties involved.

Mrs. Chalker: We seek the earliest possible end to the fighting in Mozambique and have been encouraged by recent progress in the peace talks in Rome. We are members of the joint verification commission, which was set up to monitor the partial ceasefire agreement of 1 December 1990, and have participated in European Community démarches to both parties encouraging them to reach early agreement. In addition to regular bilateral contact with the Mozambican Government, we have urged RENAMO to adhere to the partial ceasefire and reach an early comprehensive settlement.

Civil Rights

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will take into account the civil rights record of a country and, in particular, its use of capital punishment and the persecution of any group of people in respect of their sexual orientation, ethnic background, religion or minority status before he establishes or re-establishes diplomatic relations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: When considering whether to establish or re-establish diplomatic relations with a country, we judge each case on its merits.

Qaiser Khan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be made on the application of Qaiser Khan, Ref. CON/3343, to the post in Islamabad for British citizenship; when his application was submitted; when he was interviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Qaiser Khan's application form, which was dated 9 October 1989, was submitted to the British high commission at Islamabad on 6 December 1989. In interview on 27 February 1990, the family were asked to produce a further document in support of the application. To date, that document has not been received and the application therefore remains pending.

I have asked the high commission for a full report on the case and will write to the hon. Member when it is to hand.

Albania

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the United Kingdom has made to the special account for emergency aid for Albania, opened by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

In conjunction with the local authority associations, the Government launched an appeal on 4 February to help Albanian schoolchildren. Aimed at schools and other educational institutions, the appeal seeks their help in providing a number of essential items such as paper, exercise books, books, pens, pencils and educational toys. Feed the Children, a charity operating in Albania, is administering the day-to-day running of the appeal with financial assistance from the Government towards the administrative costs of collection, storage, transportation and distribution of the material raised.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

East Timor

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral answer of the Minister for Overseas Development on 9 December, Official Report, column 607, on East Timor, what review has taken place of the United Kingdom aid programme to Indonesia.

Mrs. Chalker: As far as new commitments are concerned, following the shootings in East Timor on 12 November, we concluded that projects already agreed would continue as planned.

We also concluded that projects under our technical assistance programme should continue to be developed as planned. The next major such project is in support of primary education.

As for capital aid, the second concessional loan with Indonesia expired in August 1991. No decisions have been made about a successor agreement.

Development Market Research

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will adopt development market research for the design and implementation of development projects in Overseas Development Administration activities;

(2) what is the policy of the Overseas Development Administration on the use of market and opinion research in relevant target areas when evaluating the feasibility of development projects;

(3) if he will consider the use of the "Training Manual for Development Market Research Investigators" recently published by the BBC World Service to benefit aid projects in which Britain is involved.

Mrs. Chalker: Aid projects in developing countries are very varied in nature. The Overseas Development Administration takes forecast demand, users' willingness to pay and the views and opinions of people affected into consideration in designing and appraising projects, as appropriate. The techniques used are numerous and are constantly being refined. They could, in some instances, involve procedures used in market research, including those used by the BBC.

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy regarding Overseas Development Administration spending in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: British bilateral aid to Angola totalled £1·2 million in 1990. It was divided more or less equally between food and other emergency aid and technical co-operation, mainly in support of English language teaching. The attainment of peace in Angola has opened the prospect of a more substantial aid involvement and present plans include assistance for the forthcoming elections, support for the resettlement of refugees, displaced persons and ex-combatants and continued assistance with the teaching of English, with which we are particularly well placed to help.

Mozambique

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy regarding Overseas Development Administration spending in Mozambique.

Mrs. Chalker: British bilateral aid to Mozambique totalled £25·4 million in 1990. Of that, £12 million was in the form of balance-of-payments assistance in support of the continuing programme of economic reform, while project aid—devoted primarily to the rehabilitation of transport infrastructure—and technical co-operation mainly in the form of manpower assistance, consultancies and training, accounted for some £3 million each. A further £6 million took the form of food and other emergency aid in response to the long-standing emergency. Expenditure is likely to remain substantial in the period immediately ahead.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he intends to take to advertise the new disability allowances; and at what time of day he intends adverts to be screened on television.

Mr. Scott: The advertising campaign for disability living allowance and disability working allowance commenced on 5 February. The campaign includes television commercials, supported by advertising in the national, local, specialist and ethnic press, as well as a number of other publications. The television commercials are being shown at various times throughout the day and evening, on both ITV and Channel 4. The current schedule is available in the Library. The advertisements invite people to telephone a freephone number or send off a coupon to a freepost address to obtain the "Guide to New Benefits for Disabled People".

The advertisements form part of a larger publicity campaign targeted at disabled people, carers, advisers and health professionals. As part of this campaign, we have written to over 1 million existing beneficiaries of attendance allowance and mobility allowance to let them know about the benefit changes and how to claim extra help, if appropriate. We are also writing to organisations of and for disabled people, advisers and health professionals—such as doctors, nurses and therapists—telling them about the benefits and how they can help their clients and patients to claim. We are also making use of the new out-of-hours service BBC Select to broadcast a series of information programmes about DLA and DWA.

The key materials—including the commercials and advertisements—have been researched with disabled people, and the campaign has been prepared in liaison with representatives of organisations of and for disabled people.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what training and advice has been given to staff in preparation for the introduction of the new disability allowances on 15 April.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the new disability benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member, and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Residential Care

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to ensure that the personal expenses allowance for those in residential care or nursing homes is ring-fenced from being used to meet shortfalls between the maximum income support limit and the weekly residential care charge.

Miss Widdecombe: How the personal expenses allowance is used is a matter for the claimant. From April 1993, local authorities will ensure that people placed under the new community care arrangements will retain an amount of their income for personal expenses.

Terminal Illness

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the definition of terminal illness used for those cared for in hospices and residential care nursing homes deemed eligible for the higher income support limit; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: People staying in a nursing home which is able to provide a level of care appropriate to someone suffering from a terminal illness may receive the terminal illness limit if they are actually receiving such care.

Retirement Pension

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people would benefit by increasing the retirement pension for a single pensioner by £5 in each constituency in Merseyside and in the constituencies of Ellesmere Port and Neston; Chester; Warrington, South; Halton; and Lancashire, West;

(2) how many couples would gain by an increase in the retirement pension for a married couple in each Merseyside constituency and in the constituencies of Ellesmere Port and Neston; Chester; Warrington, South; Halton; and Lancashire, West.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Charge

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would benefit and on average by how much from abolition of the 20 per cent. minimum rule for the payment of the community charge as it affects people in receipt of benefit in each Merseyside constituency and in the constituencies of Ellesmere Port and Neston; Chester; Warrington, South; Halton; and Lancashire, West.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available information relates to August 1991, and at that time about 287,000 people were receiving community charge benefit on Merseyside as a whole, of which about 155,000 were in receipt of income support. Abolishing the 20 per cent. community charge contribution by awarding maximum rebates of 100 per cent. of liability would help all those currently receiving benefit. In addition, a number of people would become entitled to benefit for the first time. In the Merseyside area as a whole, the 20 per cent. contribution is currently estimated to be £1·13 a week and, assuming no reduction in the amounts currently included in income-related benefit levels to help towards the 20 per cent. contribution, all current benefit recipients would gain to this extent.

Information concerning the individual constituencies requested is not available.

Pensions

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate as to the effect on future funds of the Maastricht pensions protocol overriding the Barber judgment on equal treatment in pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: The protocol to article 119 of the treaty of Rome, which was agreed at Maastricht, is intended to clarify the retrospective effect of the Barber judgment—it does not overturn the judgment. The full implications of the protocol are still being considered.

Private Nursing Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what qualifications and training adjudication officers have in order to establish whether claimants in receipt of income support towards private nursing care (a) actually require such care and (b) are in receipt of it;

(2) what steps are taken by adjudication officers to confirm that in addition to residing in private nursing homes, claimants of income support towards private nursing care are (a) in receipt of such care and (b) actually in need of such care.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how social fund budgets are adapted to meet increased demands arising from increased unemployment; and what account is taken of regional trends in unemployment in setting the budgets.

Mr. Scott: The trend in unemployment is one of the factors taken into account during our routine reviews of the amounts allocated to the national and district social fund budgets. These reviews have resulted in total increases of £49·6 million to the discretionary budget in 1991-92.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the remaining social fund budget of the Wakefield district Benefits Agency office.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member, and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of successful claims for the last three years for which figures were available for (a) social fund loans and (b) social fund grants in (i) Wakefield, (ii) Yorkshire and Humberside and (iii) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Scott: Such information as is available is in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action is taken to assist benefit agency offices when increased claims exceed social fund budgets during any financial year.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the benefits agency. He will write to the hon. Member, and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

National Insurance

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in 1991-92 are liable to pay national insurance contributions who have earnings between the lower earnings limit and £64·80 per week in Great Britain.

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that, on average, some 600,000 people with weekly earnings between the lower earnings limit and £64·80 will be liable to pay national insurance contributions in 1991-92.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the current lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions if revalued from its 1980 level in line with earnings; and how many people have weekly earnings between this figure and the current lower earnings limit.

Mr. Jack: If the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions had been revalued in line with the increase in earnings since 1980, its present level would be £64. It is estimated that nearly 600,000 people have weekly earnings between this figure and the current lower earnings limit of £52.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the calculated public expenditure on benefits and grants to local authorities for benefit subsidy for rate rebates in England and Wales, and community charge benefit in Scotland, for income support claimants in Great Britain in 1989-90.

Miss Widdecombe: Outturn figures are not available in the form requested. However, we estimate that rate rebate subsidy paid to local authorities in England and Wales in respect of income support claimants for 1989-90 was about £730 million. The comparable estimate of benefit subsidy for community charge rebates in Scotland is £120 million.

Local Office, Stratford

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the refurbishment programme for the Jubilee department of social security offices in Stratford, London E15.

Miss Widdecombe: The planning for the refurbishment of local DSS offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available, and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the policy of the Child Support Agency on demanding maintenance payments from former husbands regardless of whether a former wife has asked for such payments or whether a court has imposed a maintenance order in cases where the former wife is claiming income support.

Mr. Jack [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1992, c. 469-470]: Incorrect information was given in the reply. The correct information is as follows:

From April 1993, the Child Support Agency will take over from the courts the main responsibility for obtaining maintenance for children. It will provide a service for use by all families for whom child maintenance is an issue whether they are on benefit or not. Where the parent with care of a child claims income support, family credit or disability working allowance provisions in the Child Support Act 1991 mean that she will be expected to authorise the Child Support Agency to take maintenance action for her child. The agency will not act without such authorisation. Experience shows that most parents wish to co-operate in arranging financial support for the benefit of their children. It is very much in the child's interest that both parents should do what they can to support their child.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

House of Commons Services

Mr. Harris: To ask the Lord President of the Council what arrangements will be made for answering hon. Members' questions relating to the services of the House, following the appointment of the new committees recommended in Sir Robin Ibbs' report on House of Commons services.

Mr. MacGregor: I intend in the near future to make a minor change in the question rota consequent upon the replacement of the Services Committee by the Finance and Services Committee and the new Domestic Committees. After consultation with the House of Commons Commission, I have agreed that a small amount of time should be set aside for oral questions to the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee, who will respond in particular to questions concerning the estimates for House of Commons expenditure (which will be prepared under his Committee's supervision), the financial performance of Departments of the House, and the financial implications of any new or expanded services which may be proposed by the committees appointed under Standing Order No. 125 (Domestic Committees).

In order to accommodate these questions without further consequential changes to the rest of the question rota, I intend to arrange for questions to the Chairman of the Finance and Services Committee to be taken every third Monday at 3.20 pm, with questions to the Lord President of the Council as Leader of the House following at 3.25 pm.

Questions to the Member answering on behalf of the House of Commons Commission will continue to be taken every sixth Monday, at 3.15 pm.

In addition, following the replacement of the Services Committee by individual Domestic Committees, Questions concerning the exercise of the responsibilities of those Committees should be tabled for written answer to the Chairman of the Committee concerned.

I shall, of course, continue to answer questions on a wide range of matters as Leader of the House.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what data information systems his office has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Duchy of Lancaster office has a data information system for routine administrative purposes. It is not linked to any other computer system. The office is bound by the Data Protection Act 1984 to the extent specified in section 38 of the Act.

HEALTH

Mental Illness

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of beds available in the NHS hospitals in the Greater Manchester area, for the treatment of mental illness in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

Management Executive

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the present organisational structure of the NHS management executive with the numbers of staff involved in each directorate area and division within their grades.

Mr. Dorrell: The present structure of the NHS management executive and the numbers of staff involved are shown in the tables.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the numbers of staff employed on the NHS management executive, and the cost of salary ranges of such staff (a) before the functions review took place and (b) at the present time.

Mr. Dorrell: Before the functions review took place there was a chief executive and nine directors, plus one part-time non-executive director, on the NHS management executive at an annual cost of £719,492. The salary range was £44,205 to £85,447. One director was on secondment for whose services a fee is paid. Following the functions review there is the chief executive and seven directors plus one part-time non-executive director. The annual cost is £591,614 and the salary range is £44,205 to £85,447, with a fee paid in respect of one director.

Local Authority Secure Places

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many approved local authority secure places were available in the northern region on 1 January 1985 and on the same date in each succeeding year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information collected centrally relates to the position at 31 March, and is shown in the table.

[1] Provisional.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what external audit requirements he has imposed on NHS trusts and companies and trade subsidiaries linked to trusts; and whether he has required external auditors to report on the financial performance and prospects of trusts and their related companies and financial subsidiaries to him, to the trust directors, to Parliament and to the public.

Mr. Dorrell: NHS trusts will be externally audited by the Audit Commission. External auditors will certify public annual financial statements to ensure that they represent a true and fair view of the state of affairs of a NHS trust and of its income and expenditure for the year in question.

NHS trusts are firmly part of the NHS and will therefore be included in the Audit Commission's programme of NHS value for money studies.

Financial statements will be adopted by the boards of NHS trusts, and presented to the general public at annual meetings. Summarised accounts will be laid before Parliament.

NHS trusts have no powers to set up subsidiary or trading companies.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reporting requirements he has laid on NHS trusts for financial information; what information he has required them to produce in public annual financial reports; and if he will require them to produce information on salary ranges and other data analogous to that in company reports.

Mr. Dorrell: All NHS trusts are required to produce financial information for NHS management executive monitoring purposes on a quarterly basis. Published annual financial statements for each trust will generally follow commercial disclosure requirements. They will show the number of employees receiving remuneration of over £40,000 in bands of £5,000. They will also show the emoluments of the highest paid board member separately and the number of board members receiving emoluments in bands of £5,000 with no lower limit.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how often he proposes to report the statistical returns from NHS trusts to Parliament; in what form employment returns will be reported; and whether NHS trust employment continues to be included in the overall returns for district, regional and national NHS hospital and community health service data.

Mr. Dorrell: NHS trusts are required to return the same kind of data to the management executive as other provider units, that is, activity data, and manpower information. The latter is in the form of the numbers of medical and non-medical staff employed and the numbers joining and leaving. This information forms part of the national aggregated NHS data returns. It is not routinely reported to Parliament but is included in statistical publications such as statistical bulletins and the annual volume "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what internal audit requirements he has imposed on NHS trusts; whether he has required asset sales and acquisitions to be reported to him and the trust board; and whether he has required companies and trading subsidiaries linked to NHS trusts to report to him and the trust board, Parliament and the public.

Mr. Dorrell: The trust management is responsible for ensuring that an adequate internal audit function is established. The objectives and scope of internal audit within the trust should be based upon the principles described in the NHS internal audit manual. External auditors will report on the adequacy of financial controls, including internal audit, within NHS trusts.

Trusts are required to submit details of major capital expenditure and asset sales on a quarterly basis to the NHS management executive. NHS trust boards will determine what management information they require to ensure that they meet their statutory financial duties.

Trusts will prepare annual financial statements to be adopted by the board, submitted to the NHS management executive, and presented to the general public at annual meetings. Summarised accounts will be laid before Parliament.

NHS trusts have no power to set up subsidiary or trading companies.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list the items of data that comprise the contract minimum data set; what representations his Department has received as to whether the current procedures surrounding the security of the data set are adequate; what plans he has to indemnify health authorities should an individual be awarded compensation for the damage caused by breach of security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The data items that comprise the general in-patient contract minimum data set are set out in the list.

The Department has not received any representations specifically about the procedures for the secure handling of the contract minimum data set. Ensuring the security of personal health information is a prime concern of the Department of the medical profession and of NHS Managers. We are currently exploring whether steps need be taken further to strengthen security in the handling of those data sets.

There are no plans to indemnify health authorities in the event of compensation being awarded as a result of a breach of security.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the Police National Computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has a large number of data information systems. It would not be possible to fully document these other than at disproportionate cost. Where appropriate departmental systems are registered under the Data Protection Act 1984. Where there is a requirement to link to other computer systems the provisions of the Act are taken fully into account.

Anti-depressant Drugs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure per head of population on general practitioner prescribed anti-depressant drugs in each NHS region and family health service authority area for the second half of 1991; and what were the corresponding figures for equivalent periods in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information for 1991 is not yet available. The figures for 1988, 1989 and 1990 are given in the table.

Prescribing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adjudications have been considered by the independent medical adviser in each family health services authority on the financial responsibility for prescribing as between general practitioners and hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no such formal adjudication mechanism.

Mid-Cheshire Hospital Trust

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines on nursing provision and nursing grades he has provided to the Mid-Cheshire hospital trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for the trust to develop human resource strategies to enable it to provide a high quality health service.

NHS (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of (a) auxiliary nursing staff, (b) qualified nurses and (c) unit managers and higher grades in the national health service are from an ethnic minority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Blood

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many transfers of (a) blood and (b) blood products were performed by the national health service in England, Wales and Northern Ireland in each year from 1978 to the latest year available;

(2) how many donations of blood were taken by the National Blood Transfusion Service in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, in each year from 1978 to the latest year available.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on the number of transfusions is not held centrally.

The number of donations of blood given in England and Wales since 1978 are given in the table.

Year	Number of donations of blood
[1]1978	2,123,607
[1]1979	2,144,484

1988	2,140,810
1989	2,225,009
1990	2,180,856

[1] For the years 1977-80 figures relate to the number of donors reporting at blood transfusion centres.

Information relating to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department began to collect information on HIV/AIDS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department first began to collect information on HIV/AIDS in 1981, when the acquired immune deficiency syndrome was recognised in the United States of America. The Public Health Laboratory Service communicable disease surveillance centre began surveillance of AIDS in 1982, shortly after the first case of AIDS was reported in the United Kingdom.

NHS (Capital Spending)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list total capital spending on the national health service each year since 1979-80 in money terms, real terms, on 1979-80, and as a real terms percentage increase or decrease on the previous year;

(2) if he will make a further statement on the projected level of capital spending on the national health service this year.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table.

Since 1978-79 we have increased capital spending by 73·1 per cent. in real terms.

Notes:

Figures include trusts capital programme financed from (i) external borrowing (EFLs); and (ii) payments by health authorities for services.

Figures prior to 1985-86 have not been adjusted for the redefinition of capital.

Private Nursing Homes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients of 65 years and over have been discharged directly to private nursing homes in the Crewe and Nantwich district health authority from NHS hospitals in each of the past five years.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. J. Taylor, the chairman of Crewe health authority, for details.

Nasogastric Feeding Tubes

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to complete the consultations on the transfer to the family health services of the responsibility for the provision of nasogastric feeding tubes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is too early to say when our consultations, which will begin shortly, will be completed.

Geriatric Beds

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of geriatric beds for each district health authority for each of the last five years up to 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell: [holding answer 24 January 1992]: The information requested is given in the table. Over the period, the number of geriatric cases treated increased nationally from 396,000 to 468,000, as a result of substantial improvements in acute care, rehabilitation and community health services.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), Official Report, 29 January, columns 601-2, if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in England and Wales, together in each case with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 February 1992]: Population estimates are not available for parliamentary constituencies. The table shows local government electors on the 1991 registers (qualifying date 10 October 1990) and approximately corresponding mid-1990 estimates of resident population for each London borough and county district in England and Wales as requested.

The electorate figures include unknown numbers of legitimate dual registrations (eg. by persons with second homes and students). The resident population estimates include a proportion of those aged 15 to 19 at mid-1990, who were already 18 or would reach this age during the period when the 1991 electoral register was in use. This proportion has been calculated nationally and applied in every district. The estimates include residents who were not Commonwealth citizens or citizens of the Republic of Ireland, and persons detained in mental institutions, who are not eligible to be electors. Resident population estimates are currently based upon the 1981 census; provisional estimates for 1991 based on the 1991 census will be available in the autumn.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment (East Midlands)

15. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the east midlands have been unemployed for (a) more than one year and (b) more than five years.

Mr. Jackson: There were 38,336 claimants unemployed for over a year and 6,480 unemployed for over five years in the east midlands in October 1991. These figures are on the unadjusted basis.

Skills Audit

16. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to carry out an audit of skills among the labour force.

Mr. Howard: My Department commissions surveys to monitor skills and training issues at a national and regional level.

It is mainly a matter for training and enterprise councils to decide whether to undertake local skills audit. Several TECs are undertaking studies of that kind.

Job Creation (Hemsworth)

17. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what jobs were created in the Hemsworth constituency in each of the years from 1987 to 1991.

Mr. Jackson: No records are kept of jobs created, only estimates of the net change in the numbers of employees in employment are made.

Youth Training

18. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current annual cost of providing training for 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mr. Howard: Provision for youth training in Great Britain in 1991-92 was £842 million. Yesterday I announced plans for a further £17 million to be allocated to YT in the current financial year, as part of my Department's spring supplementary estimate.

19. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 1991 school leavers sought a place on a youth training scheme; and how many were successful.

Mr. Howard: Information about entrants to youth training is not available by reference to the date of their leaving school. The Government remain committed to their guarantee of an offer of a place on YT for all 16 and 17-year-olds not in a job or full-time education.

Training of Prisoners

20. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision he has made for the training and employment of prisoners and ex-offenders.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for training in prisons lies with the prison service. Time spent in prison counts as a period of unemployment for the purposes of qualifying within the priority groups eligible to enter employment training, which is delivered by training and enterprise councils. On employment matters, the employment service helps and advises ex-offenders through its extensive jobcentre network.

London East TEC

21. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken by London East training and enterprise council to improve awareness of its products and aims.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that London East training and enterprise council is improving awareness of its products and aims through a variety of marketing initiatives such as issuing regular newssheets and holding events for specific audiences including employers, educationalists and young people.

All TECs are required to publish summaries of their corporate plan and business plan and an annual report. They are also required to hold a public meeting once a year to inform their local community about their work.

Social Charter

22. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to implement any section of the EC social charter.

Mr. Howard: The social charter, signed by the eleven other member states, was a political declaration and as such does not require implementation. Where legislation is required to implement directives agreed under the social action programme, we intend to legislate within the timetable for implementation set out in each proposal.

Foreign Tourists

23. Sir Robert McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the number of foreign tourists who will visit the United Kingdom in 1992.

Mr. Forth: The British Tourist Authority's latest estimates show that it expects 18·2 million overseas visitors to the United Kingdom in 1992.

Trade Unions (Court Jurisdiction)

24. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any proposals to transfer jurisdiction over trade unions to a new court.

Mr. Forth: No.

Where trade unions act unlawfully, it should be open to bring proceedings against them before the normal courts.

Unlawful Strikes

25. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to give members of the public the right to halt unlawful strikes affecting the public services.

Mr. Forth: Yes.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Employment, to the House on 28 January, Official Report, columns 813-15.

Wages Councils

26. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for the abolition of the wages councils.

Mr. Forth: The wages councils have no permanent place in the labour market and their operation remains under review.

RECHAR

27. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the effect on employment in former coal mining areas of the hold up in payment of European RECHAR funds.

Mr. Forth: Employment issues in so far as they might affect Pontefract and Castleford were raised during the Adjournment debate on unemployment (Pontefract and Castleford), Official Report, 28 January 1992, column 922-28.

Unemployment (Plans)

28. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce new measures to alleviate unemployment.

Mr. Jackson: On top of the job placement advice and assistance to which all unemployed people are entitled, we are offering some 840,000 places on our programmes this financial year and almost one million next year to help the unemployed back to work. This package of nationally available measures represents the most comprehensive range of practical help ever and fully meets the differing needs of all unemployed people.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the numbers, average loan size, and costs to Government of career development loans in each standard region in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson: Information on numbers of career development loans and average loan size by region for the two years in question is given in the following tables. Statistics on the cost of the loans to Government are not available by region. The cost to Government for all career development loans in 1989-90 was £1·2 million and the cost in 1990-91 was £3·7 million.

Medical Advisory Service

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to strengthen the employment medical advisory service.

Mr. Forth: Since HSE reorganised its field-based staff in April 1990 the Employment medical advisory service has been an integral part of HSE's field operations division. Further plans to increase and broaden the impact of HSE's field force will be set out in the Health and Safety Commission's plans of work for 1992-93 and beyond, which the Commission expects to submit shortly to the Secretary of State for his approval.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each year since 1978 to the latest available date the budget allocation of staff, general administrative expenditure costs, both for each Health and Safety Executive doctorate and division, together with the number in post and the complemented figure for each inspectorate and the number of doctors and nurses in the employment medical advisory service and scientists within research and laboratory services division and medical division.

Mr. Forth: Available information is set out in the following tables. Changes in HSE's internal divisional structure and transfers of responsibilities within them mean that figures for budgets and staff are not directly comparable from year to year for divisions. Information is given from the earliest dates available.

[1] HSE field-based staff were reorganised with effect from 2 April 1990 to form the field operations division (FOD). From that date separate figures are not longer available for factory, agricultural and quarries inspectorates. Staff based at field consultant groups including specialist inspectors and scientists were also transferred to FOD.

[2] In April 1986 specialist inspectors including explosives inspectors who formerly worked within factory inspectorate, transferred to the newly-created technology division.

[3] In November 1991 a new division: technology and health sciences was formed incorporating the technology division.

[4] The quarries inspectorate transferred to the factory and agricultural division in October 1989.

[5] The railway inspectorate transferred to HSE from the Department of Transport in December 1990.

[6] Responsibility for offshore safety transferred to HSE from the department of Energy in April 1991.

HSE inspectorates do not have formal complements. Budgets are issued to meet staffing targets, but the actual number and grades of staff, and balance between payroll and GAE, will vary according to changes in work demands and other circumstances.

[1] Following its formation the majority of scientists previously working in the health policy division (previously medical division) transferred to the technology and health sciences division.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the ways in which the employment medical advisory service intends to encourage development of occupational health services in industry.

Mr. Forth: The medical and other professional staff in the Health and Safety Executive, will continue to provide advice on the use of occupational health services in industry, organise national and local campaigns, and liaise with relevant professional bodies to encourage the development and maintenance of appropriate standards of training and qualification for occupational health service practitioners. This work is supported by a wide range of HSE publications relevant to the development of occupational health services in industry.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are used to assess the suitability of appointed doctors; and how many doctors have had their status as appointed doctors withdrawn by employment medical advisory service; what proportion of doctors appointed by EMAS have qualifications in occupational health; how many appointed doctors are currently registered with EMAS; and how many days training, on average, each received from EMAS staff.

Mr. Forth: Doctors applying for appointment by the Health and Safety Executive's employment medical advisory service need to demonstrate interest in occupational medicine and show that they are sufficiently qualified, experienced and competent to carry out their duties. Appointments are now for five years only and automatically terminate unless reviewed. Suitability is assessed by the local senior employment medical adviser concerned, both on appointment and regularly thereafter. In 1991, 174 doctors had their appointment revoked for reasons generally of retirement, or cessation of the particular process or substance requiring appointment.

There are currently 1,340 appointed doctors registered with EMAS. Over 30 per cent. hold specialist qualifications in occupational medicine. Others have attended courses in occupational medicine which do not lead to formal qualifications, such as the Faculty of Occupational Medicine's introductory course. Each doctor is provided with induction training prior to appointment and the opportunity to attend an EMAS seminar held annually, as well as written guidance material relevant to his or her duties. Records of average training days are not maintained.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to increase the staff of the employment medical advisory service, within the health and safety executive.

Mr. Forth: Since HSE reorganised its field-based staff in April 1990 the employment medical advisory service has become an integral part of HSE's field operations division. HSE plans to increase the number of doctors and nurses working in the division by around 10 during 1992-93, from 98 in post at 1 February 1992.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the rate of doctors and nurses employed by the employment medical advisory service in relation to introduction of Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations; and what additional staff resources will be made available to effect this.

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the enforcement of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations lies with the inspectorates in the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) supported by their professional colleagues who include staff of HSE's employment medical advisory service (EMAS). EMAS has been active in helping to increase awareness of the regulations and advising on the use of occupational health expertise and services. No additional EMAS resources were required specifically for the introduction of these regulations but 56 doctors have been appointed under them to conduct statutory medical examinations.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the current amount of fees outstanding to the employment medical advisory service of the Health and Safety Executive for medical examinations.

Mr. Forth: On 31 January 1992, £10,339 was outstanding for medical examinations carried out by the employment medical advisory service.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will update the 1976 employment medical advisory service survey on the number of physicians and nurses employed in industry who have specialist qualifications in occupational health; and what action has been taken by the Health and Safety Executive on proposals presented in the 1976 EMAS document "Occupational Health Services—The Way Ahead."

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive has recently commissioned a survey of occupational health provision in industry which will provide information on the number of physicians, nurses and other professional staff in industry with specialist qualifications in occupational health. The results of the survey should be available by the autumn.

The 1976 EMAS document, "Occupational Health Services—The Way Ahead", made recommendations relating to epidemiological work, statutory medical examinations, and the provision and operation of occupational health services in relation to occupational medical and nursing input. Progress has been made in all these areas as a result of action taken by the Health and Safety Executive and by the professional bodies concerned.

The Health and Safety Commission followed up this work by issuing in 1986 a statement of its policy on the development of occupational health services and launching a programme of action to promote the use of occupational health services by employers commensurate with the health hazards and risks in their undertakings. Further impetus was provided by new statutory requirements on health surveillance, particularly the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988. In indicating the current extent of occupational health provision in industry, the survey now commissioned will help the Health and Safety Commission and Executive evaluate the impact of these developments and further develop their policy and programmes on occupational health.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff were employed by the Health and Safety Executive employment medical advisory service in each year since 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available, broken down by occupation and location; and how many posts are currently vacant.

Mr. Forth: An analysis by occupation and location of staff working in the employment medical advisory service (EMAS) is given in the following tables for each year from 1988. EMAS was reorganised with effect from April 1988, from a regional, to an area structure. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

On 1 February 1992 there were 11·5 vacant posts in EMAS.

Fire Safety Certificates

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many premises subject to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984 had yet to be issued with a fire safety certificate on 1 February in each Health and Safety Executive area.

Mr. Forth: Information about the number of premises subject to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 which have not yet been issued with a fire certificate under the Fire Certification (Special Premises) Regulations 1976 is not readily available centrally. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HSE does not hold information about premises for which the responsibility for issuing a fire certificate rests with local fire authorities.

Occupational Diseases

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people died from occupational diseases in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Forth: Figures for deaths due to asbestosis, mesothelioma and other industrial diseases, taken from the latest published statistics ("Health and Safety Statistics 1989-90"), are given in the table.

	Asbestosis	Mesothelioma	Other
1980	102	458	697
1981	137	472	633
1982	128	504	624
1983	121	573	655
1984	129	624	531
1985	140	615	587
1986	166	702	524
1987	144	808	484
1988	152	860	—
1989	145	853	—

For asbestosis and mesothelioma the numbers are taken from death certificates mentioning either of these conditions. An estimated 100 mesotheliomas annually are not asbestos-related. For other diseases the numbers are for individual awards of death benefit under the industrial injuries scheme (excluding those for asbestosis and mesothelioma) up to the discontinuation of this benefit in April 1988. These figures exclude asbestos-related lung cancers, which are estimated to be about twice as numerous as mesotheliomas.

Skilled Building Operatives

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has plans to discuss with the Construction Industry Training Board the numbers of skilled building operatives likely to be available in the medium and long term.

Mr. Jackson: Both my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State, and I meet the chairman of the Construction Industry Training Board from time to time to discuss matters relating to the industry, including manpower issues. The last such meeting took place in November. No date has yet been set for our next meeting.

Retirement Employment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people above retirement age are estimated to be in (a) full-time and (b) part-time work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The available estimates from the labour force survey show that in Great Britain in the spring of 1990, 208,000 people above state pension age were in full-time employment and 556,000 in part-time employment. Older people both above and below state pension age can bring valuable qualities of skill, experience and reliability to a job. The Government encourage people to continue working beyond pension age if they wish, and from October 1989 pensioners' earnings have had no effect on their state pension entitlement.

Income Statistics

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people, and on average by how much earn less than £3.40 per hour in each constituency of Merseyside and in the constituencies of Ellesmere Port and Neston; Chester; Warrington, South; Halton; and Lancashire, West.

Mr. Forth: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey closest to that requested is given in the table. Information is not available for individual constituencies.

Note:
It is estimated that around one fifth of part-time women employees were not covered by the survey because their gross weekly earnings were below the PAYE threshold.

Woollen Textile Industry

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of redundancies notified to his Department from the woollen textile industry for 1991 in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside and (b) Bradford travel-to-work area.

Mr. Forth: In 1991, the Department received advance notification for 1,891 redundancies in the textile industry (SIC 43) in the Yorkshire and Humberside region. Information is not available for the woollen textile industry, nor for Bradford travel-to-work area.

Training Schemes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment action places are currently filled in Scotland.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available data is for 9 January 1992 and showed 381 people in Scotland receiving employment action allowances on that date.

Training Credits

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total number of young people in training under the training credits system by training and enterprise council or local enterprise company and by standard occupational classification at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 6 February 192]: At 8 December 1991, the latest date for when information is available, it is estimated that there were over 14,000 young people in training in England and Wales using training credits. The following table shows the figures by pilot area. Figures by standard occupational classification are not yet available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Turkeys

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the extent of pododermatitis in turkeys; and what advice his Department gives for the eradication of this ailment.

Mr. Maclean: As pododermatitis is not a notifiable disease, there is no comprehensive information on its prevalence in turkeys. Pododermatitis is the result of a complex interaction of factors such as water spillage, ventilation, insulation, diet, litter quality and depth and stocking density. Advice on these factors is available in the Government's welfare code on turkeys. Ministry sponsored research has made a substantial contribution to the understanding of the condition and technical advice to overcome the problem is available from the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Poultry De-beaking

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the numbers or proportions of turkey poults which are subject to de-beaking; what guidelines he has issued to the turkey rearing industry; and what action his Department takes to ensure proper supervision of this practice.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that the proportion of turkeys which are beak trimmed in this country has fallen to under 20 per cent. Advice on beak trimming is contained in the Government's welfare code on turkeys, which states that beak trimming should be carried out only by a skilled operator or under his supervision.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to respond to the Farm Animal Welfare Council recommendation that legislation be introduced banning the routine non-therapeutic de-beaking of poultry.

Mr. Maclean: We shall be consulting interested organisations on the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of laying hens in colony systems. The Government will respond to the council's recommendations once all the comments received have been considered.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department has a large number of information systems in use. A central record of the functions of these systems is being set up, but is still in its early stages and it is not possible to provide the required information on the data systems or on any links with other systems until this work is complete. All systems containing details of individuals are registered under the Data Protection Act. There are 37 such registrations covering approximately 850 sub-systems, all of which comply fully with the requirements of the Act. None is linked to the police national computer.

Dumped Mackerel

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding large quantities of dumped mackerel being trawled in the south west mackerel box; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have received five letters.

A pelagic fishery for species other than mackerel is permitted in the mackerel box and only 15 per cent. of the total quantity of the catch retained may be mackerel taken as a by-catch. Our sea fisheries inspectorate vigorously monitors the activities inside the box. The situation is kept under close scrutiny.

Kingswear, South Devon (Moorings)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet the hon. Member for South Hams and the Dart harbour and navigation authority before making a final decision on the scheme to provide piled pontoon moorings at Kingswear, south Devon, submitted by the authority in February 1989.

Mr. Curry: I do not believe that a meeting will be necessary. The application was not complete when formally submitted for approval on 2 December 1991, but the Department is now in the process of examining further information submitted by the Dart harbour and navigation authority and by its consultants, as well as the authority's request dated 4 February 1992 for increased costs to be taken into consideration. Our officials should shortly be in a position to let the authority have a decision on the application for approval.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in north Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Mr. Curry: In 1991, payments to farmers in north Yorkshire under the various agricultural and horticultural schemes amounted to over £19 million, of which over £14 million was paid under the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme, the suckler cow and the sheep annual premium schemes. A United Kingdom national harbour improvement grant of £65,127 was made to Scarborough borough council for the construction of a new fish market at Scarborough.

Since 1979, to enable farmers to diversify and to increase the level of care for the environment, the Department has introduced the farm and conservation grant scheme, the farm woodland scheme, the environmentally sensitive areas scheme, the five-year and one-year set-aside schemes and two pilot extensification schemes. In 1991 in north Yorkshire, over 54 hectares of new woodland planting was approved under the farm woodland scheme. The Pennine dales ESA has been successful in maintaining and enhancing the landscape and wildlife quality of the area. During 1991, the total area set aside under either the five-year or one-year set-aside schemes increased to 3,705 hectares.

In 1991, the Department spent £562,000 on building maintenance and on new facilities and specialised accommodation in north Yorkshire. It also decided to relocate the central science laboratory to Sand Hutton and to relocate 600 headquarters posts to York. It is expected that some 350 to 400 posts will be recruited locally as a result, and the moves can be expected to provide a boost to the local economy.

Data for the period June 1979 to May 1980 cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

Abattoirs

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) United Kingdom and (b) EEC grant aid is available in non-assisted areas of the United Kingdom to help bring abattoirs up to the standard required by the EEC regulation; and what is the comparable position with regard to availability of such grants on (a) France, (b) Holland, (c) Belgium and (d) Germany.

Mr. Maclean: My Department does not give grants for this purpose. Grants are available to meet priorities which we have agreed with the European Commission under EC regulation 866/90. This scheme also operates in France, Netherlands, Belgium and Germany and grants are available according to the investment priorities agreed between the European Commission and the national authorities in those member states. In France, Belgium and some parts of Germany grants are available under this scheme for slaughterhouse modernisation.

BSE

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations of refrigerated containers dedicated for the use of bovine spongiform encephalopathy carcases and controlled and monitored by his Ministry outside the south-west of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In addition to those listed in my reply to the hon. Member on 23 January, Official Report, col. 289, refrigerated containers are used at the incineration plants in Dyfed, Clywd and Hertfordshire.

Industrial Trawlers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the annual catch of industrial trawlers in the North sea last year; the main species concerned and the estimated by-catch.

Mr. Curry: The provisional catch figure for industrial landings by all countries from the North sea during 1990 is 1,003,000 tonnes of which the main species were sandeel and Norway pout with some herring, blue whiting and sprat. The by-catch of haddock, whiting and saithe was 57,000 tonnes.

Source: Report of the Advisory Committee on Fishery Management of the International Council for the Exploration of The Sea, May 1991.

Preliminary figures for 1991 indicate a catch of just over 300,000 tonnes by EC countries. Figures for non-member states are not yet available.

Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will give details of how he intends to allot the extra £16·5 million in compensatory allowances payable on hill sheep and cattle in the 1992-93 scheme year.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply, 14 November 1991, c. 621]: I am pleased to be able to announce that United Kingdom Agriculture Ministers have completed the autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands and our consideration of responses to the consultation document "Environmental Aspects of Support for Hill Farming" which was issued for comment on 13 November 1991.

The review has shown that the average net farm income of livestock producers in the United Kingdom's hill and upland areas is forecast to rise in 1991-92 following significant falls in the previous two years. There will be a further increase following the exceptional additional payment of nearly £12 million in suckler cow premium, which I announced today, since over two thirds of this will go to hill farmers. After careful consideration we have concluded that, subject to parliamentary approval, the rates of HLCA per animal should be maintained at the 1991 level but the financial ceilings per hectare should be raised. This will particularly assist those producers—mainly of cattle—who did not fully benefit from last year's substantial (14 per cent.) increase in headage rates. The headage rates and financial ceilings for the 1992 scheme will thus be:

	Severely disadvantaged area (SDA) £	Disadvantaged area (DA) £
Cows	63·30	31·65
Hardy breed ewes	8·75	n/a
Other ewes	4·90	2·45
Financial ceiling (per hectare)	[1]81·13	[2]60·85

[1] Previously 62·48 per hectare.
[2] Previously 46·86 per hectare.

The additional payment limits of 1·4 livestock units per hectare and of six ewes per hectare (SDA) or nine ewes per hectare (DA) remain unchanged.

The raising of the financial ceilings will add £2·5 million to the cost of the scheme bringing the estimated value of payments to hill farmers in a full scheme year to £148·5 million.

My right hon. Friends and I have considered carefully the many responses to our consultation documentation "Environmental Aspects of Support for Hill Farming". The responses demonstrated widespread support for our intention to tackle the problems that have been associated with increased livestock numbers in some parts of the less favoured areas (LFA). We have concluded that the measures proposed in the consultation document are well balanced and are recognised as making an important contribution to the upland environment.

We propose therefore to introduce these measures as follows:

the new environmentally sensitive areas announced on 20 November situated in hill areas in England and Wales will be introduced during 1992 and 1993. New ESAs within the LFA will also be designated in Scotland and Northern Ireland. They will help farmers to conserve and enhance the landscape and wildlife characteristics of these areas;

a voluntary code of good upland management will be published and sent to each HLCA claimant this spring;

the HLCA regulations will be reinforced this year by a specific definition of overgrazing, designed to enable problems to be tackled more effectively on any vegetation type in any part of the LFA. This measure will be further strengthened by unused common land grazing rights in England and Wales no longer being re-allocated for HLCA purposes where overgrazing is found to be occurring;

it remains our intention to scale SDA sheep headage rates if these are adjusted in the future. Many respondents to the consultation stressed the close links between this proposal and the negotiations on GATT and CAP reform, particularly as regards the ewe premium. Unfortunately, the outcome of these negotiations remains unclear and the impact of scaling HLCA rates is correspondingly uncertain. It would therefore be premature to introduce scaling in the 1992 scheme. Scaling will in future be considered in the context of the autumn review, the precise arrangements being dependent on the resources available at the time. We will of course continue in the negotiations on CAP reform to press for the closer integration of environmental considerations into the common agricultural policy where practical and cost effective.

We intend to lay regulations before Parliament very shortly which will implement in Great Britain the rates and scheme conditions I have outlined. We are also taking the opportunity to consolidate and refine the current regulations. The new regulations will in particular make the provisions governing the eligibility of cattle and sheep consistent with one another and will include an amendment to the power of entry for inspectors to align it with the powers provided in both the suckler cow and the sheep annual premium regulations. Parallel regulations will be introduced in Northern Ireland.

My colleagues and I recognise the importance of these payments to producers particularly in easing their winter cash flow problems. Top priority will be given in the next couple of months to processing the HLCA payments, although this may mean that it will take a little longer to pay other grants, at least in England. Payable orders for HLCAs should start to be dispatched within the next fortnight to those producers whose claims have been lodged and accepted by local offices.

Beef Producers

Sir John Farr: Asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new measures he is taking to improve returns to specialist beef producers.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply, 6 February 1992, column 272]: I am very glad to announce an exceptional payment of nearly £12 million to support specialist beef producers. As a consequence the amount of suckler cow premium paid under the 1991 scheme will rise from £74 million to over £85 million. This will be achieved by raising the premium from £51·69 per cow to £59·64 in the less favoured areas, and from £47·43 per cow to £55·38 elsewhere.

This is a significant increase in support for the suckler cow heard. These increases follow the decision of the Council of Agriculture Ministers to increase the minimum and maximum rates of premium which member states may pay under the 1991 scheme. The rates announced in October were already well above the new minimum rate agreed by the Council. We have nevertheless decided that the rates of premium in the United Kingdom should be increased. This is further evidence of the Government's continuing commitment to promoting quality beef production from the suckler cow herd.

SCOTLAND

Employment Grant Scheme

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the operation of the employment grant scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: None. The hon. Member may care to note that there is no central Government scheme of this title.

Radiation, Holy Loch

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 503, if he will identify the source of the radiation burst recorded at Holy Loch on 14 August 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 January 1992]: It is not possible to identify the source of the two higher than normal radiation readings recorded at Holy Loch on 14 August 1991. I should emphasise the point made in my reply of 12 December 1991 that a local transient increase of this magnitude is not of radiological significance.

District Nurses

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by health authority, the number of full-time equivalent district nursing posts and the number of potential elderly domiciliary clients, as defined by the Department of the Environment under section 80 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, for 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 February 1992]: The number (whole-time equivalent) of district nurses in post is given in table 1. This table also shows nurses whose duties were a combination of two or three of the following: health visiting, district nursing and midwifery. Numbers of potential elderly domiciliary clients are not available, however table 2 shows the populations of those 65 and over.

Scottish Universities (Irish Students)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students from the Republic of Ireland are presently receiving their higher education at each university in Scotland; and what is the estimated contribution of his Department towards their tuition fees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 February 1992]: In academic year 1991-92 there were in total 307 students from the Republic of Ireland attending higher education courses at universities in Scotland. Information on the numbers attending individual universities is not available centrally. In 1991-92, the cost to the Scottish Office education department of paying tuition fees on behalf of the Irish full-time undergraduates is approximately £454,000, assuming that they are all eligible for such payments.

Fines

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to introduce day or unit fines in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 February 1992]: My right hon. Friend will consider the case for unit fines in Scotland further in the light of experience of the statutory scheme to be introduced in England and Wales under the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the initiatives taken by his Department to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and indicate the estimated reduction for each initiative by (a) 2000 and (b) 2005.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on Thursday 6 February 1992 by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment at column 231.

Recycling

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all measures undertaken by his Department to achieve the target set for the proportion of household waste to be recycled by 2000; and what is the estimated impact of each measure.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the document, "This Common Inheritance—the First Year Report", published in September 1991. Since then the Government have published a report on deposit and refund systems for beverage containers and batteries and have commissioned a major study of economic instruments necessary to encourage the recovery of resources from waste. We are also considering whether any special study of the Scottish situation is required. These reports, together with the recycling plans which are now being prepared by every waste collection authority in Scotland, will enable us to assess the extent of any further action that we will need to take.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 630, what is the estimated outturn expenditure for 1991-92 by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on compensation to victims of crimes of violence in Scotland; and how many victims received compensation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1992]: It is estimated that outturn expenditure by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on compensation to victims of crimes of violence in Scotland will be of the order of £14 million in 1991-92, but an estimate of the number of victims who will receive compensation is not yet available. In 1990-91 £12·5 million was paid to 4,845 victims in Scotland.

Ferry Services (Orkney and Shetland)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations his Department has made to the European Commission regarding the inclusion of ferry services to Orkney and Shetland within the ambit of community assistance under the European regional development fund; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 February 1992]: As I have made clear previously, the Government are willing to consider alternative arrangements for financial support for ferry services to Orkney and Shetland, including the possibility of attracting additional European Community funding. As yet, however, we have received no specific proposals for alternative financial arrangements. My Department discussed in December of last year with Orkney and Shetland islands councils the possibility of commissioning a study into alternative arrangements for financial support for ferry services.

Mink

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) on how many occasions in 1990 and 1991 his inspectors supervised, examined or monitored the slaughter of factory farm mink by injection or gassing;

(2) if he will outline the methods of gassing used to kill mink observed by his inspectors during visits to fur factory farms in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 February 1992]: A member of the state veterinary service observed the one gassing session used on a mink farm in Scotland in 1990. This was carried out by means of an internal combustion engine bubbling a mixture of carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide through a purification chamber into a wooden box into which mink were inserted. The one other mink farm uses the injection method, but was not observed in operation.

Ewes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has of the number of flocks of 1,000 ewes or more in each regional and islands area of Scotland in 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 February 1992]: The information requested is given in the following table:

ENVIRONMENT

Golf Courses

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce regulations or issue advice to local councils, restricting the proliferation of golf courses on green belt in environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Yeo: Advice on golf courses is contained in planning policy guidance notes 17 and 7 published in September 1991 and January 1992 respectively. These supplement the longstanding advice on development in green belts in planning policy guidance note 2. Golf courses should be located and designed to ensure harmony with the surrounding countryside and to conserve the natural environment. Local planning authorities should take special care when considering applications in green belts.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The information asked for is not readily available. However, my Department has a number of computer links with other organisations. None of these is with the police national computer; nor are there any plans for such links. More than 100 systems hold personal information and are registered under the Data Protection Act.

Council Tax (Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that council tax information, intended to be made public, cannot be combined with personalised information held in other publicly held information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The only council tax information to be publicly available will be the valuation list. This will contain only property information, such as the address and valuation band. It will contain no personal information, and will not be available for sale.

Barkby Thorpe

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the inspectors report into the Barkby Thorpe, Leicester inquiry.

Mr. Yeo: The inspector is preparing his report and will submit it to the Secretary of State as soon as possible. I shall ensure that the hon. Member receives a copy of the Secretary of State's decision when it is available.

Poll Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cumulative poll tax charge for a person living in Nottinghamshire since its inception; and what is his estimate of the approximate cost per head of its collection.

Mr. Key: The aggregate of the headline community charges for 1990-91 and 1991-92 for Nottingham is £685. The cumulative cost per chargepayer charged to revenue account of preparation for and collection of the charge in 1989-90 to 1991-92 in Nottingham is estimated to be £28·20.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by housing associations in Darlington since 1979; and how many units of housing this has provided.

Mr. Yeo: The distribution of resources to housing associations among local authority areas is a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have therefore asked the corporation to reply direct to my hon. Friend with the information he has requested. A copy of the reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Ozone Layer

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek a meeting of the Montreal protocol signatories to discuss the latest reports about the depletion of the ozone layer; what consideration he has given to an earlier phasing out of chlorofluorocarbons because of their known effect on the layer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional action he is taking to prevent further depletion of the ozone layer.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday, to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) [Official Report column 430].

Victoria and Albert Museum

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the trustees of the Victoria and Albert museum concerning the financing of the proposed Victoria and Albert of the North in Bradford; what views have been expressed by the trustees over the availability of £8 million from the European regional development fund; when he intends to take a final decision on the application for city grant for the project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My Department has received representations on behalf of the Victoria and Albert museum about the possibility of a grant from the European regional development fund for the proposed Victoria and Albert of the North at Listers Mill. There are a number of major requirements which would need to be met before such a project could be regarded as viable and eligible for ERDF support. These include the means of funding the £13 million non-grant capital cost of the scheme and the projected annual revenue deficit, the practicality of undertaking the works within the Bradford ERDF programme time scale and resources, and meeting public expenditure requirements.

A city grant application for redevelopment of another part of the Listers Mill complex has also been submitted and is under consideration. A conditional grant offer of £10 million was made last year to give the parties time to assemble a credible development package.

Housing (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will approve additional financial allocations to Bradford council to build homes for rent and to repair and improve council housing stock; and if he will increase improvement grant to improve private property in the district.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities' housing investment programme—HIP—allocations for 1992-93 were announced on 16 December. Part of these resources, the housing annual capital guideline—is directed at meeting general needs in the authority, including the repair and improvement of its own stock. Our policy is well established that the building of new social housing is mainly the responsibility of housing associations, with local authorities assuming an enabling role.

Authorities' HIP allocations also contain a guideline figure for resources for private sector renewal. Authorities may claim in excess of this figure, and are entitled to receive appropriate Exchequer contributions on the full sum. In addition, £30 million has been held back for 1992-93 to assist the authorities experiencing heavy demand for expenditure on mandatory grants, and Bradford will have an opportunity to bid for these resources in due course.

Crawley Borough Council

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has decided to take in relation to Crawley borough council under part 1 of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the responses that Crawley borough council has made to the notices under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988 served on the authority on 29 July 1991 in relation to its failure to meet the specified financial objective in carrying out other catering work in 1989-90; on 9 October 1991 in relation to its failure to meet specified financial objective in carrying out vehicle maintenance work in 1990-91; and on 9 October 1991 in relation to its failure to meet the specified financial objective in carrying out refuse collection work 1990-91. He has decided to take no further action in relation to the authority's performance of other catering work. In relation to the its performance of the two other activities, he has today given the authority directions under section 14 of the 1988 Act, with the effect of requiring the authority to complete a retendering exercise for vehicle maintenance work by 1 October 1992, and to seek his consent by 1 July 1992 to any decision to reassign the work to the direct service organisation; and of requiring the authority to complete a retendering exercise for refuse collection work by 1 February 1993,and to seek his consent by 1 November 1992 to any decision to reassign the work to the direct service organisation.

Somerset Levels

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the agreement to safeguard the nature conservation interest of Glasson Moss, Wedholme Flow, Thorne and Hatfield Moors and Shapwick Heath and Westhay Moor in the Somerset levels by Fisons plc and English Nature.

Mr. Heseltine: Peat has been extracted from most of these sites under planning permissions given in the 1940s and 1950s, and could legitimately have continued well into the next century. The agreement provides for all of Fisons' freehold interests in these sites to be handed over at no cost to English Nature for management of the nature conservation interest. These include some of the most valuable peat sites in England.

Of the 8,000 acres involved, the 2,800 acres on which vegetation exists will be managed immediately by English Nature for nature conservation purposes and Fisons will assist them by blocking off drains and other measures to secure the hydrological integrity of the areas. Where lowland peatbog sites have already been affected by modern working, there is no conservation reason to prevent further extraction provided conditions for the eventual rehabilitation of the sites are met. It is for this reason that English Nature has agreed that peat extraction under licence from them may continue at most of the other sites—but on condition that this will only take place in ways that minimise the further effects on undisturbed peat and allow restoration when extraction ceases.

As peat extraction is completed, leaving behind an average depth of a half metre of peat to aid regeneration, these areas will gradually be transferred to English Nature management, and Fisons will assist with restoration for conservation after-use. In addition current research funded by Fisons into peatland regeneration will continue. This will complement research undertaken by my own Department into this subject.

This agreement is a considerable achievement. Taken together with the acquisition by the Nature Conservancy Council of the Fenns Whixall and Bettisfield Mosses, it demonstrates the positive steps being taken to conserve the major lowland peat bog sites in England.

Peat Extraction

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he was consulted over the arrangement to extract peat from Glassan Moss, Wedholmle Flow, Thame and Hatfield Moors, and Somerset Levels by Fisons plc and English Nature; and when he first knew of the arrangement.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 6 February 1992]: I have been aware for some considerable time of the confidential negotiations between English Nature and Fisons plc. The final agreement, by which Glasson Moss, Wedholme Flow, Thorne and Hatfield Moors, and Shapwick Heath and Westhay Moor in the Somerset Levels would be handed over by Fisons at no cost to English Nature, was reached over the Christmas period. The chairman and chief executive of English Nature briefed the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 7 January.

TRANSPORT

Merchant Vessels

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the procedure for Government procurement of civilian merchant vessels.

Mr. McLoughlin: Merchant shipping is normally procured for Government use by chartering on the commercial market through either the Government freight market representative on the Baltic Exchange, the Government freight agent, or other specialist ship brokers.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will name the broker responsible for chartering merchant vessels for the Government.

Mr. McLoughlin: Merchant vessels are chartered through the Government freight market representative on the Baltic Exchange, presently Mr. Richard Bilton. The Ministry of Defence also charters vessels through the Government freight agent—Hogg Robinson (GFA) Ltd. —and through other specialist ship brokers.

Government Assistance for Training Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the number of Merchant Navy officers who have upgraded their qualification under the Government assistance for training scheme for each of the years since it started.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of Merchant Navy officers who have upgraded their qualification under the GAFT scheme within each financial year since it started are given in the table.

Financial year	Merchant Navy Officers
1988-89	385
1989-90	448
1990-91	491
1991-92	[1]500

[1] Estimated

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the numbers of seafarers, recruited under the Government assistance for training scheme, trained on foreign flag vessels, including the flags of the Crown and dependent territories, specifying which flag, for each year since the scheme was started.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of seafarers recruited under the GAFT scheme within each financial year since it started are given in the table.

Financial year	Officer Cadets
1988-89	227
1989-90	413
1990-91	521
1991-92	[1]500

[1] Estimated

Funding is provided to individuals who are ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom and who are eligible on nationality grounds to serve as master or chief engineer on a United Kingdom ship. While the Department assesses each trainees record on approved courses no central register is maintained of the ships on which they are employed.

Coastguard Service

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reviews of the coastguard service have been undertaken in the last 20 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Within the last 20 years there have been seven independent and three internal reviews of Her Majesty's coastguard covering all aspects of the organisation and including management, staffing—requirements, pay and grading—and resources.

London Transport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the salaries of (a) the chairman and (b) board members of London Transport for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Freeman: The annual salaries of the chairman and board members of London Transport for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are as follows:

	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
Chairman
Mr. C. Wilfrid Newton	100,000	106,000
Full-time Members
Mr. John Telford Beasley	75,000	79,875
Mr. Anthony Sheppeck	74,000	76,150
Part-time Members
Sir Neil Shields	22,000	28,000
Mr. Oscar Roith	11,000	29,290
Dr. Stephen Glaister	8,250	9,960
Mr. Roy Thomas	8,250	8,790
Mrs. Helen Robinson	8,250	8,790
Mr. Keith Brown	8,250	8,790
Mr. David Thompson	6,725	8,790
Sir Alan Bailey	6,725	8,790
Mr. J. Keith Davies	6,725	8,790

Increases in salaries for 1991-92 include provision for increased time commitment by a number of board members.

Roads, Leicester

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the tender secured by Travers Morgan to act as advisers on the proposed route of the Leicester eastern bypass was open to public competition.

Mr. Chope: Travers Morgan was appointed in the normal way, following a competition with other suitable consulting engineers drawn from the Department's approved list.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to bring into use the already completed dual carriageway section of the eastern district distributor road north of Goodwood road in Leicester.

Mr. Chope: The eastern district distributor road is a local road for which Leicestershire county council, as the highway authority, is responsible.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, before proceeding with the scheme to provide a Leicester eastern bypass, the views of the county council were sought.

Mr. Chope: No. If a viable scheme is identified the county council, and others, will have the opportunity to comment on the proposals at public consultation stage, before any final decision is taken to proceed with the project.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of the contract with Travers Morgan to act as advisers on the route of a Leicester eastern bypass.

Mr. Chope: Travers Morgan was commissioned under the Department's standard terms of engagement for highway consultancy commissions. As the contract document contains commercially sensitive information on fees and staff packages proposed by the firm and accepted by the Department, it is not the Department's policy to publish this information.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects the eastern district distributor road with the link to Oadby on the A6 to be completed;

(2) what is the daily traffic flow both ways on the eastern district distributor road in Leicester where it enters the borough at Oadby on the A6;

(3) if houses built by the city council on the Goodwood road part of the distributor road network in Leicester are to be demolished to enable dual carriageway construction to be completed;

(4) what is the present traffic flow on the distributor road network in Leicester; and by how much he estimates this will increase with the demolition of the houses in Goodwood road.

Mr. Chope: These are not matters for my Department. The eastern district distributor is a local road for which Leicestershire county council, as the highway authority, is responsible.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will terminate the arrangement made by his Department to appoint Travers Morgan as consultants for a Leicester eastern bypass.

Mr. Chope: No.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account was taken of the work Travers Morgan had already performed for the Co-operative Wholesale Society, Manchester, in planning a business park and industrial estate and road network at the adjacent Stretton Magna when the tender for the Leicester eastern bypass was secured by them.

Mr. Chope: None. A condition of Travers Morgan's appointment for the Leicester eastern bypass commission was that it relinquished any further involvement in the Stretton Magna project. This it has done.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to proceed with any consideration of a Leicester eastern bypass until the eastern district distributor road network has been completed at Oadby and a traffic pattern has emerged.

Mr. Chope: No. The two roads would serve different functions. The Leicester eastern bypass would cater for long-distance trunk road traffic and provide continuity of the trunk road network around the city of Leicester; the county council's distributor road is to serve local traffic needs and improve the distribution of traffic within the city.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment was made of the views of the Harborough district council before proceeding with a Leicester eastern bypass.

Mr. Chope: None. If our preliminary investigations identify a viable scheme, Harborough district council will have the opportunity to comment on the scheme at public consultation stage and before any final decision is taken to proceed with the project.

British Rail (Wheelchairs)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last approved new British Rail rolling stock that was inaccessible to wheelchair users.

Mr. Freeman: There is currently no statutory requirement for the Secretary of State to approve new British Rail rolling stock. Powers are being sought in the Transport and Works Bill currently before the House. Modern rolling stock approved by HM railway inspectorate under voluntary arrangements with British Rail, since 1989, is accessible to wheelchair users.

New Roads

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to enter into schemes to design and build new roads without prior consultation with the hon. Members and borough and district councils involved.

Mr. Chope: Hon. Members and borough and district councils will have the opportunity to comment on schemes after viable options have been identified, at public consultation stage.

Departmental Achievements (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in north Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The expenditure by my Department on road construction and maintenance in North Yorkshire for the financial year 1991-92 to date is £22 million.

Progress on the national road programme in North Yorkshire in 1991 has included the opening of the A1 Gatenby lane junction and the A65 Draughton bypass.

The transport supplementary grant allocated to North Yorkshire in 1991-92 was £6·1 million. The annual capital guideline for roads and parking was £6·6 million. Supplementary credit approvals of £2·7 million included provision for the urban traffic control system in York.

Information on other transport expenditure and achievements, and comparable figures for the period between June 1979 and May 1980, are not available in the form requested.

Exeter Bypass

Sir Robin Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to receive the report from Acer Consultants on the proposal to bypass Exeter to the north and west.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Later this month.

DEFENCE

Service Pensions

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the amount of retired pay receivable by a lieutenant-colonel promoted from the ranks retiring respectively (a) before and (b) after 1 April 1988.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For a late-entry lieutenant colonel with 34 years reckonable service the amounts of retired pay are as follows:

Date of retirement	Original award £ per annum	Current retired pay £ per annum
31 March 1988	11,105	14,033
1 April 1988	14,185	17,925

Since 1 April 1988 late-entrant lieutenant-colonels have been paid on the officers main scale as opposed to the lower rates previously in issue. They also qualify for increased pension entitlements. There are no plans to change pension entitlements retrospectively.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to increase the retired pay of majors and lieutenant-colonels promoted from the ranks who retired before 1 April 1988 so that they are more in line with the retired pay of those who retired after that date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The retired pay of majors promoted through the ranks is calculated on the same basis irrespective of the date of retirement. There are no plans for retrospective changes to the pension entitlement of late-entry lieutenant-colonels.

Tugs

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 526, to the hon. Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) which tugs are to be replaced by the two new tugs ordered; whether any further tugs will be required on the full entry into service of Vanguard class submarines; what is their nominal bollard pull; and if a decision has been made on their names.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The names for the new tugs are Impetus and Impulse, and the nominal bollard pull is 36 tonnes. These tugs will not replace specific existing tugs. The size and composition of the marine services vessels changes with the overall size and deployment of the fleet and the need to replace older vessels as they come to the end of their economic lives.

AOR1RFA Fort Victoria

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the AOR1RFA Fort Victoria, being built at Harland and Wolff, to be delivered to the Royal Navy.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On the basis of the shipbuilder's latest programme for completion, we expect to take delivery of the ship by the end of the year.

Defence Research Agency

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many quality assurance staff he expects to be relocated at Defence Research Agency sites at (a) Fort Halstead, (b) Chertsey, (c) Farnborough and (d) Pyestock; and how many are likely to face redundancy.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Many of the technical and scientific staff are expected to move with their tasks. Approximately 150 quality assurance technical posts are planned to be relocated at Fort Halstead and a further 200 technical posts in total to Farnborough, Pyestock and Chertsey. The distribution of posts between the latter sites is not yet finalised. In addition, a number of non-technical posts in support of quality assurance activities will be required at the above locations. We will do our best to minimise redundancies but, regrettably, it is not possible to guarantee that there will be none. The trade unions are being consulted in the normal way.

Purple Warrior Exercises

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the vessels, including details of country of registration, used in the Purple Warrior exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The last tri-service exercise which required the charter of commercial shipping was Purple Warrior in November 1987. The ships that took part were as follows:

Name	Flag
Dana Regina	Danish
Tor Scandinavia	Danish
Hamburg	Bahamas
Norrona	Faroe Islands
Viking Viscount	British
Mercandian Atlantic	Danish
St. Magnus	FRG
Gabriela Wehr	FRG
Mercandian Diplomat	Danish
Condock 1	FRG
Condock 3	FRG

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future command of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The command of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary is to be simplified. The commander in chief, fleet, will in future exercise full command of the RFA in peace as well as war, making him responsible for ensuring that the RFA maintains the high levels of operational performance required to operate effectively in the front line in close support of warships. He will be supported by a senior RFA officer and a staff of RFA and other civilian personnel.

The RFA will remain a civilian organisation and these changes will not affect the conditions of service of RFA personnel. RFA vessels will continue to wear the blue ensign and will be manned by Merchant Navy officers and ratings. Responsibility for such issues as pay, conditions of service, recruitment and initial training will remain with the chief of fleet support and be discharged on his behalf by the director general of supplies and transport (naval).

It is planned to implement these changes by April 1993 and there will be full consultation with the trade unions involved. The new command arrangements will ensure that the RFA continues to make the vital contribution to our overall defence effort of which its personnel are rightly proud.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United Nations Peace Keeping

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom will make the payment currently owed to the United Nations for special peace-keeping activities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom makes its assessed payments for any United Nations peacekeeping operations within 30 days of receiving the request from the United Nations. The only exceptions are for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force where we offset part of our assessed payment against the logistic support we provide. The adjustment for this does not take place until the end of a mandate period.

President de Klerk

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent meeting with President de Klerk and the Minister of State at the Foreign Office.

Mrs. Chalker: I had a useful and constructive meeting with President de Klerk on 20 January. The President explained his proposals for a new constitution and transitional arrangements and he emphasised South Africa's urgent need for economic development. I emphasised our support for the CODESA process and for economic growth in South Africa.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Back Payments

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) claims have been received and (b) payments made in respect of claims for back payments under the additional requirement provisions for supplementary benefit at (i) the Lerwick and (ii) Kirkwall benefit agency offices in the last 12 months.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pensioners

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 51, if he will republish the figures of pensioner incomes, distinguishing for married couples between the incomes of husbands and wives.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures required on gross incomes net of retirement pensions and supplementary benefit/income support for husbands over state pension age, their wives and single people over state pension age are in the table.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the value of the state basic pension for a single person—category A—and a married couple—category A plus category B—as percentages of (a) gross average earnings and (b) average earnings net of income tax and national insurance contribution in 1968, 1978 and each year thereafter.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the tables.

Unemployed Pensioners

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of unemployed people aged over 55 years are disqualified from national insurance unemployment benefit, or have their national insurance benefit abated, because they are in receipt of occupational or personal pensions.

Mr. Jack: About 15,600, or 8·6 per cent. of unemployed claimants aged 55 or over are affected.

Source: "Half Yearly Analysis of Unemployed Claimants" (UBS3) May 1991—grossed up from 5 per cent. sample.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make provision available to unemployed people aged 55 years or over whose occupational pension is committed to the payment of mortgage interest or other debts, and whose capital is above the limits for income support.

Mr. Jack: The Government are committed to the policy of helping unemployed people meet their mortgage interest payments through income support where their circumstances qualify them for this benefit. However, we currently have no plans to extend this form of help by means of other social security benefits.

Pensions

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 3 February, Official Report, column 96, on raising state pensions, what would be the cost separated between employer and employee on average earnings for the changes proposed.

Miss Widdecombe: The combined weekly cost in extra national insurance contributions of the proposed changes to a man on average earnings and his employer would be (a) £6 and (b) £5·50. This estimate assumes an equal split between employer and employee.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Terrorism

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is given in the table. The figures include those detained in both Northern Ireland and Great Britain.

[1] The power to detain persons in connection with international terrorism came into effect on 22 March 1984 with the introduction of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

[2] Provisional figure.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons who emanated (a) from the Republic of Ireland and (b) Northern Ireland have been detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts for each of the last 10 years;

(2) for each of the last five years, how many persons who emanated from the Republic of Ireland or Northern Ireland have been detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts on more than one occasion.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons who emanated from (a) the Republic of Ireland and (b) Northern Ireland were charged with offences following detention under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Statistics on those detained under the prevention of terrorism legislation are not kept in the form requested. The total numbers of people detained under the legislation and subsequently charged with offences are given in the table.

	Persons detained in connection with Northern Ireland terrorism and subsequently charged with offences [1]Total	Persons detained in connection with international terrorism and subsequently charged with offences Total

[1] The figures given relate to those detained on the mainland of Great Britain only. Details of those detained under the legislation in Northern Ireland and subsequently charged with offences are not kept in the form requested. However, 3,983 such people were charged with offences during the period 29 November 1984 to 30 September 1991.

[2] The power to detain persons in connection with international terrorism came into effect on 22 March 1984 with the introduction of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons who emanated from (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Republic of Ireland have been excluded from Great Britain following detention under the terms of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information available is given in the table.

	Total	Number of people removed to Northern Ireland	Number of people removed to the Republic of Ireland
1982	11	10	1
1983	13	12	1

1988	16	11	5
1989	9	9	—
1990	15	12	3
1991	10	7	3

The figures given show the number of people removed to Northern Ireland or to the Republic of Ireland in each year. In addition, 11 exclusion orders were made in Northern Ireland during this period. Nine of the orders excluded people from the whole of the United Kingdom and two excluded people from Northern Ireland only.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons who have emanated from Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland have been detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts in the Metropolitan police area for each of the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the total number of people detained under the prevention of terrorism legislation in the Metropolitan police district in each of the last three years is as follows:

Year	Number
1989	30
1990	76
1991	57

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates on which the lower limit for eligibility for compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme has been raised since 1979, with the new limit in each case, expressed in cash terms and at 1991 prices.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

Date new minimum award introduced	Minimum award £	Equivalent value at 1991 prices (£) (using GDP deflator)
April 1981	250	448
February 1983	400	669

Prison Suicides

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young men under 25 years have committed suicide while on remand in prison in the last year.

Mrs. Rumbold: Eleven unsentenced male prisoners under the age of 25 years died as a result of an act of deliberate self-harm in 1991. Of these, two were convicted but awaiting sentence. Verdicts of suicide were recorded at all six of the inquests that have so far been held into these deaths.

Wolds Remand Centre

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to visit the site of the new Wolds remand centre.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I plan to visit Wolds remand prison later this month.

Leeds Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to visit Her Majesty's prison, Leeds.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I hope to include Leeds in my programme of future visits to prisons, but I have no firm arrangements for a visit at the moment.

Heroin

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what review he has undertaken of the standard of security arrangements maintained by the United Kingdom companies presently supplying pharmaceutical heroin—diamorphine—to the national health service.

Mr. John Patten: Companies that supply diamorphine are subject to stringent security requirements which are kept under regular review.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with air travel authorities about security problems arising from regular commercial shipment of heroin via United Kingdom airports.

Mr. John Patten: The transit of controlled drugs through United Kingdom airports has not hitherto given rise to any significant security problems. The arrangements for such movements are however kept under continuing review.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the International Narcotics Control Board on the proposals to allow commercial importation of heroin—diamorphine—to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My Department has consulted the International Narcotics Control Board and is taking its views into account.

Pit Bull Terriers

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pit bull terriers have been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991; how many have been destroyed by their owners in preference to being registered; and how many he estimates remain unregistered.

Mrs. Rumbold: More than 8,000 notifications have been made in respect of all specially controlled dogs, including pit bull terriers. Some 400 claims for compensation have been made by owners who have had their dogs destroyed. Other owners have chosen to have their dogs destroyed but have not claimed compensation. By 11 February 3,200 certificates of exemption had been issued and some 1,100 applications are being processed.

The "Index of Exempted Dogs" is writing again to the remaining owners who have not yet obtained a certificate of exemption to remind them of their legal obligations.

Drinking and Driving

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was spent in each year from 1980 to 1991 on campaigns to stop drinking and driving.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The expenditure by my Department on campaigns to stop drinking is recorded in financial years and between 1980-81 and 1990-91 the expenditure was as follows:

	£000
1980-81	1,589
1981-82	1,134
1982-83	1,183
1983-84	911
1984-85	818
1985-86	1,380
1986-87	2,296
1987-88	2,677
1988-89	2,130
1989-90	2,040
1990-91	2,011

PRIME MINISTER

Russia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what information he has on Russia's plans to continue its nuclear warhead testing programme to maintain the safety and reliability of its nuclear weapon deterrent.

The Prime Minister: President Yeltsin's statement of 29 January confirmed that Russia will adhere to the one-year moratorium on testing announced in October 1991. President Yeltsin also called for other nuclear powers to refrain from testing. The United Kingdom has to carry out nuclear tests from time to time to maintain the effectiveness and safety of our nuclear deterrent.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the British gross domestic product per head expressed as a proportion of the European Community average in 1980, 1985 and 1990, including only those countries which were members of the Community in 1980.

Mr. Mellor: Figures published by the OECD in "National Accounts 1969-1990" suggest that United Kingdom gross domestic product per head expressed as a percentage of the average for the EC excluding Greece, Portugal and Spain are as follows:

	Percentage
1980	90
1985	93
1990	94

These figures are based on data of GDP at current prices and current purchasing power parities. Figures are provisional and the final set to be issued later in the year will include new information for several countries including the United Kingdom.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: The central Treasury has two major applications which both accept and transmit electronic data. The financial information system takes in and then confirms with Departments their planned and current expenditure. The Treasury economic service accepts financial and economic data from both governmental—for example, Central Statistical Office—and commercial sources—for example, the Financial Times, Reuters, and so on.

Computer centre Chessington interchanges information with other Government Departments and associated bodies in connection with pay, personnel and financial accounting computer systems. No Treasury data information systems are linked to the PNC; nor is there any intention that they should be.

The administration of all Treasury data information systems complies with the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Universities Tax

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations the Inland Revenue has received from universities about tax treatment of consultancy earnings, holiday lettings and conference facilities; and what response has been given.

Mr. Maude: The Inland Revenue has recently had discussions about the tax treatment of these activities with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the Universities of the United Kingdom, at the committee's request.

The Inland Revenue has explained that universities are entitled to the same tax exemptions as other charities. Trading profits are exempt only where the trade is exercised in the course of the actual carrying out of a primary purpose of the charity, or where the work in connection with the trade is mainly carried out by beneficiaries of the charity. Profits from other trading activities are likely to be taxable, in the same way as for other traders. The outcome in each case will depend on its own particular facts.

The Inland Revenue is seeking further information to assist in determining whether any particular activities give rise to taxable profits.

Taxation (HGV Telephones)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning the taxation of telephones in heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend has received a few representations on the taxation of the benefit of private use of employer provided telephones in heavy goods vehicles.

"Official Report"

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the price charged for the daily Official Report of parliamentary debates in 1970, 1974, 1979, 1983, 1987 and 1992, and with a constant price index where 1970 = 100.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 10 February 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Actual Price in February	Price Expressed in 1970 terms
1970	2s 3d	2s 3d
1974	20p	14p
1979	40p	14p
1983	£1·00	22p
1987	£2·95	53p
1992	£7·50	£1·04

For many years the prices of parliamentary debates were heavily subsidised. In 1983, when the annual subsidy stood at £6 million, the Government decided progressively to reduce the level of subsidy required, by a combination of price increases and improved methods of production. I was able to announce last November that the latest price increases, together with plans to enable the reports of proceedings to be "machine-read" by the HMSO presses, should permit the final elimination of the revenue subsidy —1 November 1991, Official Report, column 3.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what mortgage repossession schemes he has considered with mortgage lenders since his statement of 19 December; how many families for each scheme are expected to be housed; how many families have already been housed; what has been the total cost; and if he will give the proportion met from public funds.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Lenders have pledged funding for mortgage rescue schemes which is expected by the Council of Mortgage Lenders to amount to £1 billion if the need is there. Detailed schemes have already been announced by some lenders and announcements from others are expected shortly. It is too early to provide estimates of the number of borrowers in difficulties who are being helped in these schemes or the consequential effect on housing benefit expenditure.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Bullying

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice and guidance he issues to local education authorities for the use of teachers and school governors to counteract bullying; and if he will assist with the provision of educational materials to help children when confronted with the problem.

Mr. Fallon: The report of the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools, chaired by Lord Elton and published in 1989, contained advice on bullying. Copies of the report were sent to all schools and local education authorities in England and Wales. The Department is funding a major research project on bullying which is aimed at making available guidance on good practice for all schools when the project is completed in August 1993.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children attended (a) primary—infant and junior—and (b) secondary schools in England each year since 1979.

Mr. Fallon: The number of pupils, in England, for the categories shown are given in the table.

Full-time equivalent pupils in primary and secondary schools in England 1979 to 1991

	Maintained primary schools	Maintained secondary schools
1979	4,444,500	3,872,000
1980	4,285,600	3,866,100

1988	3,731,600	3,070,200
1989	3,786,300	2,944,700
1990	3,859,400	2,862,600
1991	3,914,800	2,853,300

Education Expenditure

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total capital spending on (a) primary—infant and junior—and (b) secondary schools in England each year since 1979 in cash terms and at 1979 prices; and what was the percentage change in the level of spending in real terms between each of those years.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is set out in the table.

Capital expenditure: Local authority maintained schools in England

Year	Nursery and primary			Secondary
	Cash terms £ million	1978-80 prices £ million	Percentage change on previous year	Cash terms £ million	1979-80 prices £ million	Percentage change on previous year

1989-90	379	189	+5·6	376	188	+27·0

Notes:

(1) 1989-90 is the latest year for which final outturn data are available.

(2) Spending covers LEA maintained, voluntary aided and special agreement schools; DES grant and Governors' contribution to voluntary aided schools split 63 per cent. primary and 37 per cent. secondary as in 1990-91 VA major named projects.

(3) Spending on special education is excluded.

(4) Spending figures are rounded to the nearest £1 million.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total spending on (a) primary—infant and junior—and (b) secondary schools in England each year since 1979 in cash terms and at 1979 prices; and what was the percentage change in the level of spending in real terms between each of those years.

Mr. Fallon: Net recurrent spending on primary and secondary schools in England is shown in the tables. The tables show for each year from 1979-80 to 1989-90, the latest year for which actual spending figures are available, expenditure in cash, expenditure at 1979-80 prices, and the percentage change in real terms spending from the previous year.

1988-89	52,217	27,761	−0·7
1989-90	55,391	27,654	−0·4

[1] Net recurrent expenditure includes total expenditure other than costs of financing capital expenditure, less income other than from specific grants.

[2] Spending on nursery and primary schools was not collected separately for years after 1986-87, so expenditure figures cover both nursery and primary schools.

[3] Expenditure figures have been repriced to 1979-80 prices using the current GDP (market prices) deflator index.

Note: The figures in the tables are derived from local education authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment.

Schools (Capital Schemes)

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of secondary schools that have applied for borrowing approval for capital schemes; and, in each case, whether approval was given.

Mr. Fallon: Under the terms of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, only local authorities are allowed to bid for borrowing approval for capital schemes.

Details of all secondary schools included within LEAs' capital bids and our decisions in each case could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Fund for Agricultural Development

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the effectiveness of the international fund for agricultural development in achieving its aim of providing long-term aid.

Mrs. Chalker: The IFAD has an effective monitoring and evaluation system, which includes the provision of an annual report on evaluation findings to the executive board. An evaluation committee of the board meets regularly to examine issues in more detail.

Africa (Food Crisis)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further contribution Her Majesty's Government are making to the second phase of the United Nation's international fund for agricultural development to overcome Africa's food crisis; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We consider that IFAD's future activities in Africa should be financed in the same way as its work elsewhere. The most important priority is to work for a successful outcome to the fourth replenishment of IFAD's resources, discussions on which will start in Qatar in April.

WALES

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what is the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has no existing or planned links between its computer systems and external data information systems or the police national computer.

Government Grants

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what Government grants were awarded for (a) ferry services and (b) bridge projects in Wales listed by county, for each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has not grant-aided any ferry services. Local authority road schemes supported under transport grant can involve bridges, and assistance can be provided, for example, through the urban programme, European regional development fund and historic buildings and ancient monuments grants. A central record is not kept.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to identify and quantify the use made of day centres in South Glamorgan for Alzheimer's disease sufferers and their carers and the extent to which they have succeeded in improving the quality of life for those involved.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 10 February 1992]: The three-day centres run by the Alzheimer's Disease Society in Cardiff provide a valuable service for sufferers and their carers.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to extend the finances available through urban aid grant for running day centres for those suffering from Alzheimer's disease and their carers in South Glamorgan.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 10 February 1992]: In Wales, funding previously available for mental illness services through the urban programme is now directed through the mental illness strategy. In 1992-93, the Welsh Office will make £58,035 directly available to the Alzheimer's Disease Society for the running of its three day centres in Cardiff.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each county in Wales his estimate of the number of people suffering from Alzheimer's disease at the present time and in each of the past five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The information is not available centrally, but, based on an estimate derived from the NHS Health Advisory Service's publication "The Rising Tide—Developing Services for Mental Illness in Old Age" published in November 1982, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, there are approximately 28,000—9,500 males and 18,500 females—suffering from Alzheimer's disease in Wales.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the centres available in each county in Wales which cater for Alzheimer's disease sufferers and their carers together with the financial contribution made to each by his Department.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The information is not available centrally, but the Department made available in 1991-92 a total of £2·26 million through the mental illness strategy and elderly initiative grant schemes towards services in Wales for elderly people with a mental illness, including sufferers from Alzheimer's disease.

Waste Water

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total percentage of waste water (a) treated at inland works and receiving secondary or tertiary treatment, (b) treated at inland works and receiving primary treatment or less, (c) discharged at sea through properly designed long outfalls and (d) discharged into the sea without treatment by the water authorities operational in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the following three reports: House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities 10th report "Municipal Waste Water Treatment"; The study of coastal sewage discharges carried out by consultants in environmental services for the Department of the Environment, a copy of which is in the Library of the House; and "Waterfacts 1990" published by the Water Services Association, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Projected Traffic Levels

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish his latest estimate of projected traffic levels for Welsh roads for 2000.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Overall traffic growth in Wales is expected to be in line with the current National Road Traffic Forecasts which give an increase in traffic between 1991 and 2000 of 18 per cent. on low growth and 30 per cent. at high growth.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what data information systems his office has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Privy Council Office has data information systems for routine administrative purposes, and a link is maintained with the Chessington computer centre, which operates the payment of salaries. The department is subject to the Data Protection Act 1984 to the extent specified in section 38 of the Act, and personal data held are covered, except where they are expressly exempt.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refreshment Facilities

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many high chairs are available in refreshment establishments within the House of Commons for the use of children.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall ask the Director of Catering Services to write to my hon. Friend.

Members' Salaries

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will outline the implications for future changes in hon. Members' salaries of the negotiations taking place on performance pay for grades 5 to 7 civil servants.

Mr. MacGregor: The nature of the new pay arrangements for grades 5 to 7 civil servants are currently being developed. It is too early to assess the implications, if any, for future changes in hon. Members' salaries.

Divisions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list in order from largest to smallest the numbers of Divisions hon. Members took part in during the 1990-91 Session.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 31 January 1992]: This information is available in a document entitled "Survey of Voting Participation Rates Regarding House of Commons Divisions", published by Campaign Information, a copy of which is available in the Library.

HEALTH

North-West Region (Hospitals)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds there were in the North-West regional hospitals in (a) 1979, (b) 1987 and (c) 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table.

National Health Service Hospitals, North Western Regional Health Authority

Radiotherapy (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are awaiting radiotherapy in the Greater Manchester health authorities; how many were on the lists for treatment in each year since 1989; and what is the average waiting time for treatment in each authority in each of those years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the number of patients waiting for radiotherapy is given in the table. The median waiting time for those treated from radiotherapy waiting lists in the Greater Manchester area was 23 days in 1988-89 and 22 days in 1989-90. Information is not yet available centrally for 1990-91.

The figures relate to South Manchester, the only health district in Greater Manchester where radiotherapy is carried out.

Greater Manchester—Waiting lists for radiotherapy In-patients and day cases

Year	Number waiting[1]
March 1989	190
March 1990	244
March 1991	183

Long-stay Beds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each (a) regional health authority and (b) each district health authority the current number of national health serrvice long-stay continuing care beds.

Mr. Dorrell: The only figures available centrally on long-stay beds relate to mental illness and learning disability. For information on numbers of geriatric beds, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 11 February. Long-stay geriatic beds are not separately identified.

Patients (Personal Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to allow a patient to consent to, or to be aware of, those uses and disclosures of personal information that are not obvious at the time the patient provides the information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Patients give consent (either expressly or implicitly) to the use of personal information for the purpose of their care and treatment and for NHS management purposes. The Department is currently consulting about a draft EC directive on data protection which includes a proposal that individuals should be given specific advice about the purposes for which it is proposed to record information about them.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether NHS trusts are required to have qualified and nominated officers with financial responsibility corresponding to those in the Local Government Acts 1975 and 1988.

Mr. Dorrell: Paragraph 6.2b of schedule 2 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 clearly states that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has the power to control the qualifications of persons who may be employed as officers of the trust if he thinks it necessary.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what responsibilities non-executive directors of NHS trusts are required to exercise for audit and financial scrutiny.

Mr. Dorrell: An NHS trust's accounts are the corporate responsibility of the trust's board. All board members, including the non-executives, are expected to take general responsibility for every aspect of the trust's business and operation. While it is not a statutory responsibility many of the non-executive directors have financial and commercial backgrounds of particular relevance and are able to make an effective contribution to financial management.

Cost-weighted Activity Index

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how his Department calculates the cost-weighted activity index; and if he will place the relevant technical papers in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost-weighted activity index is a broad aggregate measure of the increase in activity in the hospital and community health services. Since activity increases at different rates in different areas of the HCHS, and it would not be appropriate to add different types of activity together—for example hospital in-patient activity and treatments by chiropodists—the increases in activity in each of these areas are weighted together according to the proportion of total expenditure on them. Thus, because hospital in-patient activity consumes the largest share of expenditure—over 60 per cent.—growth in this area of activity has the highest weight in the index.

A more detailed description of the construction of the index, with information about the specific areas of activity included, and the expenditure weights used, was published in the Department of Health evidence to the Social Services Committee in 1986 and details of certain revisions to the index were given in the Department of Health memorandum to the Health Committee in 1991. Both of these publications are available in the Library.

Citizens Charter

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effects the citizens charter will have on the provision of information for patients about medical treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: The patients charter confirms the existing right of patients to receive sufficient information about the proposed treatments, the possible alternatives and any substantial risks, so that they can make a balanced judgment in deciding whether to consent to treatment.

Cardiologists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of cardiologists per one million population in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland at the last convenient date for which data is available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest data available show that there are 3·3 consultant cardiologists per million population in England. Information relating to Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Medical Treatment

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Helth what measures his Department is taking to ensure that questions regarding medical treatment, whenever the patient requests such information, are answered in a prompt, accurate and comprehensive form.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department issued guidelines in August 1991 which required that before a patient receives treatment he is entitled to as much information as is necessary in order to decide whether to consent to that treatment. After treatment has commenced, a patient has the right under the Access to Health Records Act 1990 to see his record and to receive an explanation of the information recorded. The Department's advice on the Act encourages the informal voluntary disclosure of information.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Government will bring forward legislation to provide better information for patients about medical treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: Such legislation is unnecessary since patients have the right under common law to give or withhold consent prior to examination or treatment. To exercise this right patients are entitled to be given a clear explanation of any treatment proposed, including any risks and any alternatives.

Qa Business Services

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish a public inquiry into the sale of Qa Business Services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Qa Business Services was formed in December 1989 as a result of a management buyout of the management services division of West Midlands regional health authority. The company was put into administrative receivership in September 1991. Some of the assets of the company were acquired by AT & T ISTEL in October 1991. Any investigation of this company's affairs would be a matter for the Department of Trade and Industry.

NHS Administration

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of staff employed by the NHS are engaged in administrative work; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At September 1990, staff employed on the terms and conditions of the administrative and clerical staffs Whitley council made up 15·1 per cent. of the total NHS work force in England compared with 13·3 per cent. at September 1979. More than one quarter of them work in direct support to clinicians. Numbers of such clinically-related staff have nearly trebled since 1979 and this is helping to free clinical staff to concentrate their skills and experience on direct patient care.

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in preparing a statement about the rules governing the confidentiality and security of personal data held within the OPCS; and if he will now make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A draft statement of policies has now been produced, a copy of which I have placed in the Library. The Registrar General will be seeking the views of a range of outside bodies before this statement is formally adopted. The policies it proposes are, however, being followed in OPCS, pending consideration of the views obtained through the consultation process.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of allowances and expenses to members of family practitioner committees in the last year for which figures are available; and what is the projected cost of such allowances and expenses in the first full year of family health service units.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 27 January 1992]: Family health services authorities (FHSAs) were established on 17 September 1990 and consequently 1989-90 was the last full financial year of operation for their predecessor family practitioner committees (FPCs). Arrangements to remunerate (essentially to compensate) members for their time spent on FHSA business were introduced only during 1989-91.

The information derivable from the 1989-90 and 1990-91 annual accounts of FPCs/FHSAs in England is shown as follows.

This detailed information is not collected in-year and any projected cost for the current financial year would be speculative. However, broadly equivalent information derived from the 1991-92 annual accounts of FHSAs will be available in the autumn.

	1989-90 £000 (cash)	1990-91 £000 (cash)
Chairmen's remuneration	450	1,003
Members' remuneration	—	2,234
Members' travelling and subsistence expenses	498	527

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Service Staff

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, by staff grade and specialty, the number of full-time equivalent medical and nursing posts available to health service hospitals for 1976, 1981, 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Government Grants

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what Government grants were awarded for (a) ferry services and (b) bridge projects in Northern Ireland listed by region, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Grants amounting to approximately £60,000 have been awarded in the current financial year to the operators of the ferry service between Ballycastle and Rathlin island. No grants were awarded in previous years.

The funding of public road bridges is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Moneyreagh (Street Lighting)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the adequacy of the street lighting at Moneyreagh village was last reviewed; and if he will arrange for a further review of street lighting at Moneyreagh.

Mr. Needham: The adequacy of street lighting in Moneyreagh village is monitored regularly and improvements are carried out when considered necessary, subject to the availability of finance. No specific review is planned.

Toll Bridges

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the figures for the (a) annual income and cost and (b) capital debt outstanding for toll bridges in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There are no toll bridges in Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hours per week the chairman works for Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.; what involvement he has in its day-to-day management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: This information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Londonderry Port and Harbour Commissioners

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of the members of the Londonderry port and harbour commissioners; and if he will identify with which user firms of the port each of these persons is associated.

Mr. Needham: The membership is as follows:

J. T. Eaton (Chairman)
J. Doherty (Deputy Chairman)
M. G. Black
G. Craig
C. B. Doherty
Mrs. H. McClure
J. S. McIlvenny
C. Murray-Cavanagh
Councillor J. Tierney

No member of the board is associated with a user firm of the port.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will estimate the number of (a) employees in employment and (b) self-employed people in the Darlington constituency in June 1983, June 1987 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Jackson: Latest available constituency data for the self-employed relates to the population census for 1981.

Information available for employees in employment is from the periodic censuses of employment and is given in the table. No census was taken in 1983.

Employees in employment in the Darlington constituency

September of each year	Number of employees
1984	33,300
1987	34,100
[1]1989	36,700

Youth Training

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to review the guarantee that all 16-year-olds with special needs in the north-west region will be offered a place if they so wish on any available youth training scheme.

Mr. Jackson: The YT guarantee assures young people, whether they have special training needs or not, the offer of a suitable training place. The Department's regional directors are in close touch with every training and enterprise council about the guarantee position in its area.

Where necessary, the Government have offered TECs additional support so that they can continue to meet the guarantee.

Seafarers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the provisions of employment legislation which exempt seafarers on vessels registered in the United Kingdom or Crown dependencies from the general provisions of such legislation.

Mr. Forth: Provisions which exclude seafarers of various descriptions in some circumstances from certain of the provisions of general employment legislation include:

Section 119 of the Employment Protection Act 1975
Section 10 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975
Sections 8 and 9 of the Race Relations Act 1976
Sections 141 and 144 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978
Section 30 of the Wages Act 1986
Paragraph 16 of schedule 1 of the Employment Act 1990

Merseyside TEC

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what amount of provision of training he will purchase from the Merseyside training and enterprise council in 1992-93.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 10 February 1992]: This is the subject of local negotiations. Therefore figures for 1992-93 are not available.

The Employment Department contract with Merseyside training and enterprise council for 1991-92 is made up of the following expenditure:

	£
Block 1	20,906,987
Block 2	12,960,897
Block 3	3,551,350
Block 4	1,205,303
Block 5	2,029,638
Total	40,654,170

Block 1 covers:	Youth Training and Education.
Block 2 covers:	Adult Training—Employment Training.
Block 3 covers:	Business and Enterprise.
Block 4 covers:	Other expenditure including local initiative fund activities, advertising and publicity etc.
Block 5 covers:	Management costs.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in North Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The Leeds and North Yorkshire area of the Employment Service and North Yorkshire training and enterprise council (TEC) have helped a wide range of people and businesses in North Yorkshire during 1991. The main achievements are set out as follows; those for the Employment Service cover the calendar year 1991; and for North Yorkshire TEC cover the period 1 April to 31 December 1991.

Employment Service achievements in North Yorkshire

Over 17,000 people placed into jobs;
Over 16,000 unemployed people interviewed and advised under the Restart and similar arrangements;
Over 1,100 unemployed people helped through nine Jobclubs.

North Yorkshire TEC

1,700 young people entered Youth Training;
Over 2,100 unemployed people entered employment training;
1,000 unemployed people entered the enterprise allowance scheme;
Help under a range of special initiatives, including a Centre for Training and Development, Business Development Projects, Women into Enterprise, and Access into Management.

Employment Service expenditure in North Yorkshire is not available. The expenditure of the North Yorkshire TEC in the calendar year is not available; the TEC budget for financial year 1991-92 is £18·03 million.

Information is not available for 1979 and 1980.

Other services and facilities of this Department, such as the wages inspectorate and the redundancy payments service, are also available in North Yorkshire but cannot be separated out.

SCOTLAND

Data (Personal Health Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take with regard to the code of practice on the confidentiality of personal health information in the light of the seventh report of the Data Protection Registrar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My officials have arranged a meeting with the Data Protection Registrar's department to discuss the matters raised in the report. There are no plans at present to amend the code of practice but the concerns of the Data Protection Registrar will be taken into account in any future revision of the code.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to allow patients, consumers and parents to consent to, or to be aware of, those uses and disclosures of personal information that are not obvious at the time the citizen provides the information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Personal information contained in health records is primarily for the health care of patients. Advice to patients on other uses which may be made of such information is already contained in some hospital admission booklets. It is planned to extend this practice to all hospital admission booklets and guidance on this will be issued to health boards and NHS trusts.

There are no plans to extend the restrictions on the use of the information contained in a pupil's progress record as set out in regulation 10(3) of the School General (Scotland) Regulations 1975.

Consumer affairs are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Diabetes

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the action taken by health boards in response to the report produced by the working group of the national medical consultants committee on the management of diabetes in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Comprehensive information is not available about action taken by health boards as a direct response to the recommendations made in 1987 by the National Medical Consultative Committee working group on diabetes. Clinical audit which is supported by specific Government funding is now the principal mechanism employed to review and improve patient care in the whole range of settings and six health boards have reported 12 separate audit projects for diabetes in general practice and in hospitals and in shared care. Applications for two national projects to be led by the recently formed Scottish study group for the care of the young diabetic will shortly be considered for funding. A third project involving health boards in the central belt of Scotland is under discussion.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives from the British Diabetic Association; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no records of my right hon. Friend meeting representatives from the British Diabetic Association in recent years.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each health board, the number of consultant diabetic physicians per head of the population.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the table.

Consultants in Endocrinology and Diabetes at 30 September 1991

Health board	Number (whole-time equivalents)	Rate per 100,000 population
Greater Glasgow	3	0·32
Lothian	1	0·13
Tayside	1	0·25

Notes:

1. Data are provisional.
2. All the consultants are whole time.
3. All other boards have no diabetes consultants.
4. Information collected centrally records only the main specialty of a doctor. The above figures therefore do not include general physicians who have a special interest in endocrinology or diabetes.

Assisted Places

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has decided on the level of fee remission grant which will be available to parents under the assisted places scheme in school session 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend is making £9·6 million available for fee remission in 1992-93. Fifty-eight schools across Scotland will participate in the scheme. The funding now available should increase the number of pupils benefiting to the planned level of about 3,000 by the end of the session.

Blood

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many donations of blood were taken by the National Blood Transfusion Service in Scotland, in each year from 1978 to the latest year available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The number of donations taken in each year since 1978 was:

Year ending 31 March	Number of donations
1978	284,358
1979	284,184
1980	279,653
1981	286,230

1988	259,991
1989	266,259
1990	275,565
1991	291,819

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many transfers of (a) blood and (b) blood products were performed by the national health service in Scotland in each year from 1978 to the latest year available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Information on transfers performed is not available in the form requested. Figures of blood and blood products supplied by the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service to hospitals for use in each year was as follows:

Major products supplied

Year ending 31 March	Whole blood (donations)	Red cell concentrate (donations)	Factor VIII (vials)	Factor IX (vials)	Albumin (bottles)
1978	138,988	106,169	7,733	3,681	26,943

Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the numbers on employment training and youth training schemes in Scotland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Employment training and youth training scheme/youth training in training in Scotland 1987 to 1991

Date	Employment training	YTS/Youth training
March 1987	[1]—	38,000
March 1988	[1]—	46,000
March 1989	21,200	49,800
March 1990	26,400	45,100
March 1991	25,200	[2]37,000

[1] Not collected—employment training programme did not start until September 1988.

[2] Excludes figures for the national providers unit provision.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the financial contribution of employers to youth training and employment training.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: My right hon. Friend does not seek to obtain detailed information about financial contributions made by employers, either in money or in kind, to the youth training or employment training programmes. It is in the interest of employers to contribute towards training costs and they are encouraged by local enterprise companies to do so. Furthermore, local enterprise companies work to maximise employer contributions through their contracts with providers.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people in Scotland are currently on youth training and employment training schemes;

(2) if he will make a statement on the arrangements made for the independent national monitoring of the quality of youth training and employment training schemes;

(3) how many people on youth training and employment training schemes in Scotland have employee status.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: In Scotland responsibility for monitoring the delivery of youth training and employment training rests with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of these two bodies to write to the hon. Member with the information that he has requested about the numbers and status of people on the youth training and employment training schemes.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) persons aged 16 years and (b) persons aged 17 years who are on youth training schemes are classified as special needs trainees; and how the numbers and percentages have changed in the years that youth training has been in operation.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 20 December 1991]: For years 1986-87 to 1989-90 it is not possible to identify precisely by age the numbers and percentages of trainees with special training needs in Scotland. However, it is possible to identify the numbers of trainees in respect of which payments to providers were made at rates equivalent to special training needs rates. These numbers will include some payments made in respect of trainees who did not have special training needs and will contain instances of double counting. On this basis for each of the years the estimated number and proportion of trainees for whom payments at special training needs rates were made are:

	Trainees aged 16 years		Trainees aged 17 years
	Estimated number	Per cent.	Estimated number	Per cent.
1986-87	105	0·4	56	1·0
1987-88	117	0·5	61	1·1
1988-89	167	0·7	94	1·2
1989-90	1,403	6·7	364	5·7

No information is available about payments made to providers in respect of trainees with special training needs in 1990-91; and Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise do not collect data on special needs trainees broken down by age. That information will therefore not be available for 1991-92 and later years.

Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise are required to collect data on the total number of trainees with special needs. The proportion of Youth Training starts by trainees who have special training needs which are expected this year, and the targets which have been set for 1992-93, are as follows:

	1991-92 (per cent.)	1992-93 (per cent.)
Scottish Enterprise	19	20
Highlands and Islands Enterprise	21	21

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many youth training placements in electrical and electronic engineering in Scotland went (a) to young men and (b) to young women; and if he will provide comparable figures for health, community and personal services placements.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I regret that this information is not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time (a) male and (b) female jobs there were in Scotland in June 1979; and how many there are now.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: For the years requested it is not possible to obtain separate figures for a number of male full-time employees. Figures are available for the total number of male employees. In June 1979 there were 1,205,191 male employees in employment. In June 1991 there were 1,014,677 male employees in employment. There were 565,202 full-time female employees in employment in June 1979 and 529,763 full-time female employees in employment in June 1991.

Medical Facilities (Western Isles)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any consideration is being given to the construction or development of new medical facilities in the Uists or Benbecula.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 February 1992]: This is a matter for the board.

Self-employment

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many self-employed people there have been in Scotland each quarter since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The information is available on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information if necessary.

Health Services (Remote Areas)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Scottish Health Advisory Council working group on the provision of health services to remote and island areas will extend its deadline for submissions beyond 31 January; and whether it intends to seek submissions from local health councils.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Evidence was requested on behalf of the working group in a letter sent on 3 December 1991 to a number of statutory bodies and organisations, including the Association of Scottish Local Health Councils. The letter asked for responses by 31 January 1992, and requested recipients foreseeing difficulty in meeting this deadline to advise the group's secretary accordingly.

The association is currently undertaking consultation with local health councils and hopes to submit evidence to the group by the end of March, or failing that, by the end of April.

In addition to the collection of written evidence, the group plans to visit the areas covered by its remit, including the Western Isles. The visit programmes will include both formal meetings with representatives of the health service and open sessions for members of the local community.

Manufacturing

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many manufacturing jobs there were in each region of Scotland in June and December of every year since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The information requested is available only from the census of employment which is conducted by the Employment Department. The census of employment is not carried out annually. Information is given in the table for the years in the required period in which a census of employment was conducted.

Total employees in employment by Scottish region 1981, 1984, 1987, 1989

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Deficit

18. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the figures for the United Kingdom trade deficit in the last three quarters for which the adjusted figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: United Kingdom current account trade deficits in the second, third and fourth quarters of 1991 were £145 million, £1,342 million and £1,585 million respectively.

Industrial Policy

22. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet representatives of the northern region CBI to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Lilley: I next plan to meet representatives of the northern region CBI later this month to discuss a range of business matters.

Innovation

23. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the new innovation unit within his Department.

Mr. Leigh: I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that DTI's innovation unit, launched last October by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, is proceeding well with its task of promoting innovation as the key to wealth creation. On 18 December last year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the appointment of five top business men to the unit. All five have hands-on experience of innovation in industry and will use that experience to deal directly with firms, higher education institutes, schools and local media.

32. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from business men about the introduction by his Department of the Spur scheme, for innovation by small and medium-sized enterprises.

Mr. Leigh: Business response to Spur (Support for Products Under Research) has been most positive and to date 90 offers of grant have been made to companies throughout Great Britain. The scheme has also been warmly welcomed by the Confederation of British Industry, the independent Advisory Council on Science and Technology (ACOST) and the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology.

Kuwait

24. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on Britain's share of the Kuwaiti market since the end of the Gulf war.

Mr. Lilley: According to the information we have, Britain regained its pre-Gulf war OECD market share within two months of the end of hostilities. Our exports to Kuwait increased in value by nearly 30 per cent. in the second half of 1991 compared with the second half of 1989 (the most recent comparable period). United Kingdom companies gained at least £500 million worth of reconstruction business in Kuwait last year. The United Kingdom is now Kuwait's largest European supplier.

Manufactured Exports

25. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's share of manufactured exports by developed nations over the last five years.

33. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's share of manufactured exports by developed nations over the last five years.

Mr. Leigh: As the table shows, the United Kingdom's share of total OECD exports of manufactured goods increased during the period 1985-90. Our share has been broadly stable since the early 1980s, after decades of decline.

United Kingdom share of the value of the OECD's exports of manufactured goods

	Percentage
1985	7·2
1986	7·0
1987	7·4
1988	7·6
1989	7·5
1990	7·8

Manufacturing Industry

26. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the president of the CBI to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. Lilley: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters. I next plan to meet representatives of the CBI on 19 February.

27. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to assist British manufacturing industry to become more cost-effective and competitive.

Mr. Redwood: Over the last 10 years British manufacturing industry has increased its productivity by over a half and its exports by over two-thirds, faster than any of our major competitors. I plan to ensure that these substantial improvements in competitiveness are sustained by continuing to improve the climate in which British business operates, by reducing burdens on business and stimulating investment, innovation and the spread of best practice, by encouraging vigorous competition at home and by working for trade liberalisation and promoting our exports world wide.

30. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will meet representatives of the east midlands regional CBI to discuss policy towards manufacturing industry.

Mr. Lilley: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters.

Engineering

28. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next hopes to meet representatives of the engineering sector to discuss exports.

Mr. Lilley: My DTI ministerial colleagues and I have frequent contacts with representatives of the engineering industry on a range of matters.

Regional Policy

29. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet representatives of the European Commission to discuss regional policy.

Mr. Leigh: I have at present no plans for such a discussion.

Manufacturing Balance of Trade

31. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when Britain last had a surplus on its manufacturing trade; and what forecast he has made of the manufacturing trade balance for the future.

Mr. Redwood: Britain last had a surplus on its manufacturing trade in 1982. Since 1982 the value of United Kingdom exports of manufactures has increased by 131 per cent. My Department does not make forecasts of the trade balance.

Self-catering Accommodation

34. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to be in a position to respond to the concerns of those involved in the self-catering accommodation sector over EC guidelines with regard to fabric content standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Commission decided, in May 1991 to suspend work on the draft EC Directive on the Fire Behaviour of Upholstered Furniture pending further research into the fire characteristics of materials used in furniture and into test methods. The purpose of this research, as discussed at a consultative meeting in Brussels on 29 January, is to support requirements imposing limits on the burning behaviour of upholstered furniture and the associated emission of smoke and toxic gases. We have made it clear to the Commission that we will retain our Furniture Regulations until a regime consistent with the level of protection in the United Kingdom is available under the directive.

As a quite separate issue, the application of the United Kingdom's Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations to self-catering holiday accommodation has necessitated a wide-ranging review of the legal position with the involvement of other Departments. I am consulting with colleagues about a possible way forward and I hope to be able to make some positive proposals shortly.

Regional Assistance (North-east England)

35. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on regional assistance for the north-east of England.

Mr. Leigh: Of the four North-East region counties, Cleveland, Durham, and Tyne and Wear have assisted area status, as does the Morpeth and Ashington travel-to-work area in Northumberland. For 1990-91, expenditure on regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grants, regional development grants and by English Estates in the region amounted to £84 million. In addition, £97 million has been committed between 1989 and 1991 under ERDF programmes for the region, which also has access to ECSC loans.

Telephone Boxes

36. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with OFTEL relating to the increase in the number of working telephone boxes since 1987.

Mr. Redwood: I meet the Director General of OFTEL from time to time to discuss a wide range of telecommunications issues. I welcome the fact that BT now has approximately 100,000 public telephone boxes compared to 78,000 in 1987, and that 96 per cent. are in working order compared to 77 per cent. in 1987. There are also approximately 5,000 Mercury telephone boxes of which 98 per cent. are in working order.

Manufacturing Output

37. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to boost manufacturing output.

Mr. Lilley: The reduction of inflation is the precondition of renewed sustainable growth.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has recently received about manufacturing output.

Mr. Lilley: I have received the recent excellent report by the CBI's manufacturing advisory group which showed that there has been a transformation for the better in manufacturing performance during the 1980s.

Bicycles

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the British bicycle industry about Chinese imports; and what action he has taken to maintain fair trade in bicycles.

Mr. Redwood: I have received a number of such representations. The European Commission is currently investigating an anti-dumping complaint brought by the European industry against imports from China. The case for introducing a Community-wide import quota is also under consideration. The treatment of Chinese bicycles under the Community's generalised scheme of preferences is kept under review.

Perfume Exports

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the level of imports and exports of perfumes for each of the last five years defined by country.

Mr. Redwood: The available information is given in the following table. The value of United Kingdom exports in 1991, £62 million, was 3 per cent. higher than in 1990, while imports fell by 5 per cent. to £116 million.

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on negotiations concerning intellectual property rights in respect of perfumes during the current GATT round.

Mr. Lilley: The Government welcome the progress made in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations on trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights (TRIPs). The GATT Director-General's proposals for improved international rules for the protection and enforcement of all main forms of intellectual property should benefit United Kingdom trading interests. The perfume industry stands to benefit particularly from his proposals for strengthened multilateral rules to combat trade in counterfeit goods and to protect undisclosed trade information.

Computer Misuse

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce proposals to amend the Computer Misuse Act 1990 to take into account the effect of viruses and hackers on databases where electronic data interchange is in use.

Mr. Leigh: The Secretary of State has no plans to introduce proposals to amend the Computer Misuse Act 1990. Since the passing of that Act, the DTI has monitored its application, and has not identified any features of electronic data interchange which would indicate the need for such amendment.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will investigate the fees charged by Touche Ross with regard to the Bank of Credit and Commerce International with a view to introducing further safeguards for creditors.

Mr. Redwood: I set out in a reply on 20 January at column 58, the means by which a liquidator's remuneration must be approved, that is by the creditors acting either through a liquidation committee or in general meeting, with recourse available to the court. In the case of BCCI, this procedure will apply to the remuneration of Touche Ross as liquidators after 14 January 1992, the date of the winding up order. The procedure provides safeguards in control by the creditors who have a financial interest and by the courts who are independent of the liquidator.

The Secretary of State does not have a role in deciding the amount of remuneration which should be paid, but has the power if necessary to audit a liquidator's accounts in order to ensure that the approved amount has been drawn.

The remuneration of Touche Ross as provisional liquidators, that is up to 14 January, must be approved by the court and I understand that their bill will shortly be lodged with the court for approval.

Environmental Claims

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures the Government are taking to monitor and control false and misleading environmental claims on products sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: Environmental claims about goods and services are generally subject to the provisions of the Trade Descriptions Act, 1968. Enforcement is the responsibility of local trading standards officers.

House of Fraser

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list for each of the regulatory bodies to which copies of the inspectors' report on House of Fraser were sent prior to, or at the time of, publication, and the conclusions each body has reported to him on that report.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 February 1992]: My predecessor sent copies of the inspectors' report to the following regulatory bodies: the Bank of England, the takeover panel, the Law Society, the Securities and Investments Board, the Securities Association and FIMBRA. Copies were disclosed to the Bank of England and the takeover panel prior to publication of the report. The remaining bodies were passed copies on publication.

My Department's memoranda of November and December 1990 to the Trade and Industry Committee gave information on action taken at that time by regulatory bodies following their consideration of the House of Fraser report. These were published in March 1991. Subsequently the following further information has become available.

For the Bank of England the Governor gave evidence to the Committee in 1991. FIMBRA has informed the Department that it has nothing to add to the evidence given to the Committee by the Bank of England, which is the lead regulator for Harrods Bank.

As for the Solicitors Complaints Bureau, as set out in my Department's December 1990 memorandum the report of the solicitors instructed by the Law Society to consider the part played by Herbert Smith in the matters dealt with in the inspectors' report was considered by the adjudication committee in November 1990. The adjudication committee considered that there was no evidence of professional misconduct by Herbert Smith.

The same report was considered in January 1991 by the standards and guidance committee of the Law Society, responsible for setting professional standards. That Committee considered that there was no evidence to justify changes to the solicitors' practice rules or to the principles contained in the Guide to the Professional Conduct of Solicitors. The committee was of the view that any guidance on the issues raised by the House of Fraser case should be by way of "best practice", and as such was a matter for the relevant specialist committee, that is the company law committee.

The company law committee, which is composed of specialist practitioners engaged in private practice, commerce and industry, has set out its views on the company law issues raised by the inspectors' report in the Law Society's memorandum submitted to the Trade and Industry Committee in April 1990. The company law committee had no comments to make on the conduct or regulatory issues raised by the case. The Committee is of the view that professional conduct guidance on such a technical area of practice would be inappropriate. In practice the lessons to be learnt from cases such as House of Fraser will have been incorporated into the internal practice procedures adopted by the large City firms involved in such takeovers and mergers. On that basis, the committee was therefore content to let the matter rest.

The takeover panel has informed my Department that on 23 January 1992 the High Court dismissed the Fayed brothers' application for leave for judicial review of the decisions of the panel and its appeal committee in December 1991 not to grant an adjournment of the hearing of disciplinary charges being brought against the Fayed brothers by the panel executive. The decision of the High Court is subject to an appeal by the Fayeds.

Small Firms Merit Award

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many companies, by standard planning region, who were successful under the small firms merit award for research and technology stage I, were successful in stage II;

(2) how many applications he received from companies in each standard planning region under the small firms merit award for research and technology stage II; how many were approved in each region; and how many had been successful in stage I.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The stage 2 SMART competition is open only to those who won stage 1 the previous year. Firms unsuccessful in stage 1 cannot enter stage 2. In 1991 there were 134 entries for the stage 2 competition, 103 of which have been successful as follows:

Region/territory	Number of entries	Number successful
East	14	10
East Midlands	16	11
North East	5	4
Northern Ireland	4	4
North West	11	9
Scotland	16	13
South East	22	12
South West	14	12
Wales	12	11
West Midlands	11	9
Yorkshire and Humberside	9	8

Research and Development

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by travel-to-work areas the amounts of money allocated to companies from his Department's research and development budget.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The following is, for each of the last two completed financial years and the current year to date, a breakdown by DTI region and travel-to-work area, of DTI innovation budget grants paid to companies.

Please note, however, that the majority of the innovation budget is devoted to support for collaborative R and D projects where payments are made to one of the participating organisations (project leader) who distributes the grant to the other collaborators on the DTI's behalf. In these cases only one travel-to-work area is recorded on the DTI's database, but much of the money shown to be going to a particular travel-to-work area will be passed on to other companies, in other travel-to-work areas and possibly in other regions.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Eurocontrol

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of Eurocontrol.

Mr. McLoughlin: I believe that Eurocontrol has an increasingly important role as the key organisation in Europe for co-ordinating the planning of air traffic management and related research and development, and the collection of enroute air navigation charges. In particular, Eurocontrol will continue to be responsible for building and operating the central flow management unit; for the management of the European air traffic control harmonisation and integration programme, which is likely to be expanded shortly to include air traffic control systems at airports; and for the operation of the European co-ordination team to identify measures to improve air traffic control capacity in the short term.

Eurocontrol will be opening negotiations on an agreement on strengthened co-operation with the EC Commission. It will also be considering whether its convention is appropriate to meet its future needs.

Twelve states have signed the Eurocontrol convention to date, and 15 states are members of the Eurocontrol route charges system. A number of other states attend Eurocontrol meetings as observers. Transport Ministers of the European Civil Aviation Conference have encouraged those member states which have not yet applied for membership of Eurocontrol to do so at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to improve co-ordination and the work of Eurocontrol and the European Commission in respect of a pan-European air traffic control system, in order to avoid duplication.

Mr. McLoughlin: As the result of a United Kingdom proposal at the meeting of the permanent commission of Eurocontrol on 3 December 1991, Eurocontrol, in co-operation with both the EC Commission and member states of the European Civil Aviation Conference, will formulate an outline plan for the future air traffic management system of its member states. This initiative provides a valuable opportunity to avoid duplication of work. During the forthcoming United Kingdom presidency of the EC the Government will encourage the Commission to support fully Eurocontrol's work on the future system by providing increased support for research and trials.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the European air traffic control harmonisation and inspection programme; and what is the financial contribution by member states.

Mr. McLoughlin: Following a United Kingdom initiative, Transport Ministers of the member states of the European Civil Aviation Conference agreed in April 1990 a strategy under the title of the European air traffic control harmonisation and integration programme, and invited Eurocontrol to manage the programme. The first phase of this strategy, which has just been completed on time, consisted of a comprehensive assessment of the present arrangements for air traffic control in Europe. The second and third phases will comprise programme development and acquisition and implementation of new equipment. The final phase will consider the air traffic management system needed in the longer term.

On 17 March my right hon. and learned Friend will be chairing a meeting in London of Transport Ministers of ECAC member states, to consider further measures to reduce flight delays and cope with growth in air traffic. We expect the meeting to reach agreement on a major extension of the current strategy for air traffic control.

The programme's management costs are met by Eurocontrol, who estimate that these will be 5·8 million ecu per annum for 1992 onwards. Investment in the equipment necessary to implement the programme will be made by the participating ECAC member states.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the work being done by the Atlas study group on air traffic control in Europe, and on the costs incurred and how they are funded.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Atlas study is being carried out for the EC Commission. Its objective is to define and provide specifications for the creation of a single unified air traffic management system for European airspace. I understand that the cost of the study, which will be fully met by the Commission, is likely to be some 7·5 million ecu.

British Rail

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for transport if he will give a breakdown of British Rail's funding in 1990-91 and an estimate on the same basis for the current year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows.

British Rail sources of funds

£ million cash

	1990-91	1991-92[1]
Requirements
Investment	850	1,125
Operating losses	350	575
Interest	50	75
Total	1,250	1,775
Sources
Borrowing	375	600
PSO grants	600	900
Level crossing grants	25	25
PTE Grants	100	125
Asset sales	125	75
Working capital	25	50
Total	1,250	1,775

[1] Estimate.

Notes:

1. All figures rounded to the nearest £25 million.

2. Operating losses exclude depreciation.
3. The external finance limit comprises borrowing and grants (other than PTE grants).

Speed Limits

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will be consulting on proposals to revise the criteria for setting speed limits.

Mr. Chope: We have today begun consultation on proposals to make more flexible the criteria used for setting speed limits. The new criteria put greater weight on the local environment and should result in speed limits more closely reflecting local conditions. Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Library of the House.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in November 1988, the then Secretary of State took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. McLoughlin: The then Secretary of State's schedule does not indicate that he took part in any such activities.

ENVIRONMENT

Tyre Recycling

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the result of his monitoring of current initiatives to tackle the stockpiles of used tyres; whether he proposes to introduce tyre recycling targets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: A survey of licensed and unlicensed tyre dumps is now being conducted by a consultant on behalf of the Departments of the Environment and of Energy. It is hoped that results, which will be available later this year, will give a clearer indication of what action needs to be taken. No plans for tyre recycling targets exist at present but the United Kingdom is participating in a working group organised by the European Commission as a part of its priority waste stream exercise to examine the issue in a harmonised European manner.

Housing

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sources of referral to housing associations and the percentages that these nominations take up of housing associations stock for (a) the whole of England and Wales, (b) the north-east region and (c) Greater London.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information relates to housing association lettings made in the first nine months of 1991:

Percentage of lettings

	England	[1]North	Greater London
Source of referral
Local authority nomination	35	30	46
Statutory agency	2	1	1
Voluntary agency	3	1	9
Direct application	35	50	11
Mobility scheme	1	[2]—	2
Within the housing association	19	15	25
Other housing association	1	[2]—	2
Other	4	3	4
Total	100	100	100

Notes:

[1] North: Northumberland, Tyne and Wear, Durham, and Cleveland.

[2] Less than 0·5 per cent.

Source: National Federation of Housing Associations.

For information on the position in Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

National Parks (Transport)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what appraisal he has made of transport needs to and within each of the national parks.

Mr. Baldry: None. The appraisal of transport needs to and within the national parks falls to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and to the relevant local and highway authorities.

Noise

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the number of complaints regarding excessive noise made to local authorities in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Information is not available in the form requested. The Institution of Environmental Health Officers monitors the number of noise complaints received under the statutory nuisance procedures and records the number of remedies informally achieved or prosecutions carried out. This information appears in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics"—No. 13 of 1990—a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The statistics do not define "excessive noise".

Litter

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many members of the public have made and are making use of the anti-litter provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Baldry: The most recent information on intended or actual prosecutions was given in my answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on Friday 8 November 1991, Official Report, column 305. The Tidy Britain Group, which receives grant in aid from my Department, is undertaking further surveys of local authorities to monitor the implementation of part IV of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. We await the results of its latest survey.

Parish Councils

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the results of Aston business school's survey of parish councils.

Mr. Key: We have today published Aston business school's report entitled "Parish and Town Councils in England: A Survey". Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. A survey of the report has been sent to all the parish and town councils which took part in the research.

Bypasses

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what stage of the planning process his Department is consulted over new bypasses.

Mr. Yeo: In the cases of trunk road bypasses, the Department of Transport would invariably consult my Department at the earliest stages of developing route proposals.

Where the bypass is a proposal of the local highway authority, it should be subject to the statutory development plan procedures, and shown in the structure and local plan for the area. This is made clear in PPG 12, "Development Plans and Regional Guidance", published on 10 February 1992. My Department must be consulted at each stage in the process leading to the adoption of the plan. The Secretary of State intends to make a direction shortly, to ensure that he is notified of any local highway authority road scheme which has not been subject to local plan procedures, or is in conflict with the development plan.

Bristol Development Corporation

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by date created, firm and number of jobs, the jobs established by the Bristol development corporation.

Mr. Key [holding answer 11 February 1992]: This information is not available in the form requested. The corporation's estimate of total employment in the Bristol urban development area, based upon consultants' surveys, was 14,000 jobs in January 1989 and 18,000 jobs at March 1991.

West Yorkshire Transport Museum

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he considered the application by the West Yorkshire transport museum for city grant; whether it has been approved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 12 February 1991]: An application for city grant was received on 9 January and is currently under appraisal. A decision on the application will be made as soon as possible.

Stretton Magna Park

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will declare the whole of Stretton Magna park in Leicestershire a conservation area to protect the local flora and fauna.

Mr. Trippier: I am advised by English Nature that this area does not meet the criteria necessary for it to be notified by it as a site of special scientific interest. I understand that the area contains a number of species that are protected in their own right under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Farmland Hedges

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he is taking to prevent the removal of hedges from farmland.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 2 December 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on Tuesday 3 December 1991, Official Report, column 79.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in north Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The main expenditure of the Department in north Yorkshire is through the revenue support grant system. In 1991-92, the total external support for local councils in north Yorkshire is just over £260 million. In addition the Department has allocated over £12·6 million to local housing authorities in north Yorkshire to support capital programmes expected to total about £24 million this year. The Department also provided revenue support for housing, funding for an estate action scheme of £2·75 million and energy efficiency schemes. Substantial sums are also available from the Housing Corporation funded directly by the Department. Comparable figures for 1979 are not readily available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what data information systems the Lord Chancellor's Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department is currently developing and installing a computerised case management system for Crown court offices. No direct links from this system to other systems are planned, but data on court appearances currently provided to the Home Office on paper will in future be produced on magnetic media.

Other systems still in the planning stage are for a computerised database of statute law, and case management and accounting systems for the county courts, companies courts, and bankruptcy court.

All computer systems within the Lord Chancellor's Department comply fully with the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984, as will all future systems.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The legal secretariat to the Law Officers operates a file-tracking system, but does not participate in external data information systems and has not been consulted with a view to such participation. There are no plans for any link with the police national computer or with any other computer system.

The Treasury Solicitor's department operates personnel, case-tracking and billing systems and has use of the LEXIS external data information system. There are no plans to link any of these systems to the police national computer or any other computer system.

The Crown prosecution services operates personnel, finance and a number of case-tracking systems. It has also agreed a new standard case-tracking system which is under development. The Crown prosecution service has subscribed to the LEXIS legal data base for a trial period. The criteria for inclusion in information systems are that the data should be necessary for operational, administrative or management purposes. The Crown prosecution service has no plans to link to the police national computer, but is discussing with other criminal justice agencies the possible automated exchange of the case data already passed in paper form for essential operational purposes.

The Serious Fraud Office operates personnel, case-tracking and document-controlled systems. There are no plans to link the systems to the police national computer or to any other external computer system.

The systems operated by each Department comply with the Data Protection Act 1984 and each Department is registered with the Data Protection Registrar.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Soley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give the figures for county court orders for mortgage repossessions for 1990 and 1991, including the percentage increase, according to (a) standard economic region and (b) county.

The Attorney-General: The figures for the number of repossessions are not collected. The only information available on mortgage possessions is the number of actions entered and orders made in each county court. The table gives the information for 1990 and 1991 for each county and standard economic region and shows the respective percentage increases. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all of the orders made will have resulted in the execution of warrants of possession. At this stage the 1991 figures are provisional and therefore liable to revision in the future.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will arrange for decisions by the Crown prosecution service as to whether or not criminal proceedings are to be brought to be communicated to any police officer under investigation as quickly as possible;

(2) in how many cases the Crown prosecution service has received files for consideration in connection with the West Yorkshire police inquiry into the West Midlands serious crime squad;

(3) when he expects the Crown prosecution service to have reached a decision in all cases submitted to it as a result of the West Yorkshire police inquiry into the West Midlands serious crime squad;

(4) in how many cases the Crown prosecution service has decided whether criminal proceedings are to be brought against any police officer under investigation arising from the West Yorkshire police inquiry into the West Midlands crime squad.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General when he received the West Yorkshire police report on the West Midlands serious crimes squad; and when he expects to reach a decision.

The Attorney-General: Between 16 March 1990 and 16 October 1991 the Crown prosecution service has received from the West Yorkshire metropolitan police a total of 73 files relating respectively to complaints about individual officers and investigations unto practices of the West Midlands serious crime squad. Consideration of these cases is well advanced, but a final decision will not be taken in any particular case until it has also been reviewed in the context of the cumulative evidence available from all the cases under consideration.

It is not at present possible to say when final decisions will be taken, but this will be as soon as possible and it is hoped in the near future. In accordance with normal practice in this type of case, the decisions will be communicated to individual officers by a senior officer and not directly by the Crown prosecution service.

Bailiffs

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General what action the Lord Chancellor proposes to take in relation to the lack of regulation over some private bailiffs who enforce judgments and orders by the seizure and sale of property.

The Attorney-General: The right of a creditor to seize and sell a debtor's property to enforce a judgment or order is an important remedy which requires a difficult balance to be struck between the interests of creditors and debtors. This is not easy to achieve, whether enforcement be by sheriffs, county court bailiffs, certificated bailiffs, or other private bailiffs. My noble and learned Friend is currently conducting a review of the organisation and management of these civil enforcement agents and he hopes to publish a consultation paper later this year. The terms of reference of the review are, to consider:

(a) whether changes should be made to the organisation and management of agents involved in the civil enforcement process;

(b) the part which the state should play in the organisation and management of enforcement agents;

(c) the ways in which any changes to the organisation and management of enforcement agents could be achieved;

(d) whether any changes to the law governing the work of enforcement agents are necessary or desirable.

My noble and learned Friend envisages a three-month consultation period during which he hopes to obtain a wide spectrum of views. Any changes the Government decide to make as a result of the review are likely to involve legislation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-year-old boys and girls in prison received a punishment for a disciplinary offence in 1990 and in 1991; and for what offences they were punished.

Mrs. Rumbold: The age of prisoners punished for a disciplinary offence was not recorded centrally up to 1990. Such information will be available for 1991 but the data will not be complete until the second half of this year.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-year-old prisoners have been held in police or court cells in 1991; and in which ones they have been held.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the total number and location of 15-year-old prisoners held in police cells is not collected centrally. When a 15-year-old prisoner is received into police cells the police inform the local liaison governor and priority arrangements are set in hand for the prisoner to be transferred immediately to a prison service establishment.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which prisons 15-year-old girls were held in 1990 and in 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: According to the records held centrally, 11 girls aged 15 were received into prison service establishments in England and Wales in 1990 and all were held only under sentence. They were initially received into Holloway prison, New Hall prison or young offender institution or Risley prison or remand centre. One girl was recorded as having been held subsequently in Askham Grange prison but information about all such transfers was not retained centrally. Data for 1991 are not yet complete.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-year-old girls were received into prison in each year of the past decade; for what offences they were convicted, and how long were the prison sentences.

Mr. Rumbold: The number of 15-year-old females received under sentence is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales"—table 3.10 of the volume for 1989, Cm. 1221—copies of which are in the Library.

The information requested for the years 1981-90 is given in the tables. Data for 1991 are not yet available.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women prisoners were held in police or court cells during 1991; where they were held; and for how long.

Mrs. Rumbold: The average number of women prisoners held in police cells throughout 1991 was two. At various points during the year women prisoners were held in police cells by the Cheshire, Greater Manchester, Lancashire, Merseyside, Metropolitan, Staffordshire, Surry and West Midlands police forces. It is not possible from the information available to say how long individual prisoners were held.

Police Cells

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is responsible for ensuring that the correct medication as prescribed by the doctor is given to a night prisoner held in a police cell.

Mrs. Rumbold: Paragraph 9·5 of code of practice C issued under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 provides that where a detained person is required to take or apply any medication in compliance with medical directions, the custody officer is responsible for its safekeeping and for ensuring that he is given the opportunity to take or apply it at the appropriate time.

Road Deaths

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of deaths of drivers and pedestrians caused by cars taken without the owner's consent in each year since 1980.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not available centrally.

National Lottery

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to obtain the views of interested parties on the subject of a national lottery since 17 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are considering carefully how best to consult interested parties about the issues raised by a national lottery; an annoucement will be made as soon as possible.

Refugees

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees were accepted from Yugoslavia in each of the years 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is given in the table. At end-January 1992, around 430 asylum applications by Yugoslav nationals, mainly made in the last three months of 1991, were still under consideration.

Heroin

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that prospective importers of heroin—diamorphine—keep standards of transport security and site security equal to those maintained by the current United Kingdom supplier.

Mr. John Patten: No decision has yet been taken to license the commercial importation of diamorphine. A precondition for the grant of any licence to deal in diamorphine is that the drugs inspectorate is satisfied on the arrangements proposed by the prospective licensee for transport and site security.

Marriages of Convenience

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years his Department has been notified by the registrar general that a proposed marriage is purely one of convenience.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Statistics of such notifications are not maintained.

Begging

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) prosecuted for begging, (b) convicted of begging, (c) prosecuted for sleeping rough and (d) convicted of sleeping rough in the Metropolitan police district in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. John Patten: Information for 1989 and 1990, which is provisional, is given in the table. 1991 data are not yet available.

DNA Samples

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with chief constables the need for DNA samples to be taken from all those convicted of violent crimes; if he will maintain a national register of such DNA information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are practical, legal and ethical issues in the collection of samples for DNA profiling and in the development of a national DNA database. My right hon. Friend has asked the Royal Commission on criminal justice to consider this subject and we await its recommendations.

Vagrancy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests have been made under the Vagrancy Act 1824 in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of people who are arrested is not collected centrally. The data given in the table relate to the number of persons prosecuted and convicted for offences under the Vagrancy Act 1824 in Wales from 1986 to 1990, information for which is provisional.

Number of persons prosecuted and convicted of offences under the Vagrancy Act 1824 in Wales—1986 to 1990[1]

[1] Provisional.

Local Government, Hampshire

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will give consideration to deferring his determination of the proposed new parliamentary constituencies for Hampshire until such time as the Local Government Commission has brought forward its recommendations for the future structure of local government in Hampshire.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. A general review of all parliamentary constituencies in England is currently being undertaken by the Boundary Commission, which is under a statutory duty to make a report to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary within the time scale laid down in the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986. As part of that review process, the commission publishes provisional recommendations—in the case of parliamentary constituencies in Hampshire, these were published on 6 February—and then considers any resulting representations, together with the outcome of any local inquiry which it may hold, when making its final report. My right hon. Friend will consider that report when it is submitted.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in March 1990, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During my visit to Hong Kong I had a number of official engagements and meetings. I also had a private engagement with representatives from Conservatives Abroad.

Hillsborough Family Support Group

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he received the letter from the Hillsborough Family Support Group sent to him on 22 October 1991; and when he expects to reply.

Mr. John Patten: The letter from the Hillsborough Family Support Group was received in my office on 23 October 1991. A reply has now been sent by my officials. I apologise to the group for the delay in replying.

Credit Reference Agencies

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent investigations he has undertaken into the current operation of credit reference agencies; and what information came out of those investigations.

Mrs. Rumbold: The operation of credit reference agencies is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading and the Data Protection Registrar. I understand that they keep this matter under review.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the operation of credit reference agencies; and what response he has made.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have received 15 written representations on the operation of credit reference agencies since the beginning of 1991. Enforcement of the law bearing on the operation of credit reference agencies is a matter for the Data Protection Registrar, the data protection tribunal and the Director General of Fair Trading.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in north Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The readily available information is as follows. The Home Office pays specific grant on a proportion of the county council's expenditure on the police, magistrates courts and probation services and on civil defence. The proportion varies according to the service. My Department also pays grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to enable the county council to employ additional staff to meet the special needs of local communities of Commonwealth origins. Information on the payment of these grants, and on Home Office expenditure on Her Majesty's prison service establishments in north Yorkshire, and on the emergency planning college at Easingwold, is as follows.

Specific grant paid in respect of expenditure in financial year

£000s

	1979-80	1991-92[1]
Police[2]	8,322	28,869
Magistrates courts[3]	[6]	2,478
Probation[3]	[6]	2,185
Civil Defence[4]	[6]	368
Section 11[5]	0	16

[1] Estimated.

[2] Rate of Grant: 50 per cent. in 1979-80, 51 per cent. in 1991-92

[3] Rate of Grant: 80 per cent.

[4] Rate of Grant: mainly 100 per cent.

[5] Rate of Grant: 75 per cent.

[6] Not available.

Net operating costs of the two prison service establishments in north Yorkshire in 1990-91: £6·169 million.

Estimated expenditure on emergency planning college in 1991-92: £2·758 million.

Illegal Drugs (Import)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new measures he plans to introduce to combat the importation of illegal drugs into the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is the Department with the primary responsibility for combating the importation of illegal drugs into the United Kingdom. The Department is engaged in a number of initiatives both at home and on the international scene.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise chairs the mutual assistance group 1992 on customs co-operation within the European Community which is working towards greater co-operation and the strengthening of the external border of the Community. An important feature is the sharing of intelligence and arrangements are in hand to implement a computerised intelligence system—to be known as the customs information system—early in 1992. A new protocol to the Naples convention is also under discussion with the aim of improving co-operation between customs administrations in criminal matters covering such areas as cross border surveillance and controlled deliveries.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is also participating in plans for the new European drugs unit, which will help to co-ordinate the intelligence resources of law enforcement agencies across the European Community. The Department, with its wide experience in anti-smuggling work, will be fully represented in the new agency alongside the police.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, in conjunction with the Customs Co-operation Council, is taking a leading role in an international initiative to promote co-operation between customs authorities and international carriers. A major objective is to secure advance information about suspect persons or consignments, so as to enable customs to target its anti-drugs operations more effectively. Through the ratification of the 1988 Vienna convention on drugs, Customs and Excise is also engaged in developing international working arrangements under the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990 for the boarding of vessels in international waters and under the same legislation has also implemented, in July 1991, the arrangements for the seizure of cash suspected of being the proceeds from, or for use in, drug smuggling.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is also about to increase its capability in aerial surveillance and is co-operating in extended international surveillance exercises. It is extending its network of drugs liaison officers overseas and is actively pursuing its training programme for overseas customs and drugs law enforcement officials. The programme is targeted primarily at drug source and drug transit countries.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is also alive to the dangers of the illicit trade in the precursor chemicals used to manufacture drugs. The United Kingdom has been to the fore in encouraging the development of effective measures to counter this trade and we are currently working with our EC partners on a revised regulation to ensure consistent and effective action across the Community.

On the domestic front Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is extending its use of memoranda of understanding with trade organisations in order to improve the flow of drugs information and to assist organisations to develop security arrangements. The Department is also entering into a new training programme in 1992 to assist flexible anti-smuggling teams—FASTs—to make use of advance intelligence and advance targeting of drugs suspects. The implementation of the review of anti-smuggling controls continues with the setting up of FASTs and co-operation between regional collections and their opposites in Europe through joint memoranda is being developed. In addition, research and development for enhanced scientific and technical aids continues to take place. On 30 January 1992, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced the allocation of assets seized from international drugs traffickers to anti-drugs work in the United Kingdom. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise received over £600,000, which will be used at operational level to assist in the fight against drug trafficking.

ENERGY

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1988, the Minister of State took part in party-political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Wakeham: My right hon. Friend the Member for Chester (Sir. P. Morrison) met fellow Conservatives in the margins of official duties on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1988.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in June 1988, he took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Wakeham: My right hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Parkinson) did not take part in any political activities on his visit to Hong Kong in June 1988.

Major Energy Users Council

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the Major Energy Users Council relating to electricity prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I met representatives of the Major Energy Users Council—MEUC—on 12 February to discuss electricity prices for large consumers, and listened carefully and sympathetically to their concerns. My right hon. Friend asked the MEUC to provide detailed information about past and present electricity prices for MEUC members, on an individual site or company basis, as well as about other options to reduce energy costs which companies may have investigated, such as on-site generation or energy efficiency measures. It agreed to do so. Although my right hon. Friend and I fully appreciate the concerns of the MEUC about the levels of its electricity prices, it was made clear to it that the Government would not provide public subsidies. The Government remain fully confident that they have set in place adequate safeguards to protect the interests of all consumers in the electricity market.

Coal Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give by year for each year from 1979 the value of coal imported (a) in cash and (b) in real terms into the United Kingdom showing in his answer (i) the port the coal was unloaded at and (ii) the country of origin of the coal.

Mr. Wakeham: [holding answer 4 February 1992]: The figures for coal imports, including the costs of insurance and freight, are shown in the tables:

[1] Some imports previously recorded by Customs and Excise as originating in the Netherlands have been re-allocated to the other countries indicated or, where revised country of origin data is not available, included in the residual entry, "Others". This re-allocation has been carried out for 1991 and estimates of such imports previously classified to the Netherlands have been included for 1990. Figures for earlier years have not been re-allocated to individual countries.

[2] Includes imports previously recorded separately for the German Democratic Republic.

[3] Real terms is defined as cash figures adjusted to 1990 price levels by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the Gross Domestic Product deflator. An estimated value for the Gross Domestic Product deflator has been used for 1991.

Due to rounding the sum of the constituent items may not equal the totals.

THE ARTS

British Library

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Minister for the Arts when the shelving at the British Library development at St. Pancras will be in usable condition; and when he expects the official opening to take place.

Mr. Renton: Problems have been experienced with the mechanical movement and paint treatment of the basement bookshelving. A solution to the mechanical problem has been factory tested and the British Library is carrying out its own tests in the basements at St. Pancras. Tests on the paint, however, have shown there may be inadequate paint protection in places. A number of options are under discussion with the contractor concerned. Until the outcome of these discussions is known it is not possible to say when the library can start to move its collections into the new building. The bookshelves are a small, albeit important, part of the overall project. The rest of the project is essentially unaffected by the bookshelving and is still progressing within the cash budget set for it in 1988. An announcement about the official opening will be made as soon as uncertainties have been resolved.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1990, the then Minister took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Renton: The visit to Hong Kong in October 1990 of my predecessor, my right hon. and learned Friend the present Chief Secretary to the Treasury, involved official duties only.

European Arts Festival

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what funding he proposes to make available for the European arts festival to mark the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Community in the second half of 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We will be making £6 million available for the European arts festival over the two financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Parliamentary approval for this new service in the current financial year will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the Office of Arts and Libraries vote—class XII, vote 2. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £100,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Child Poverty

13. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the Child Poverty Action Group to discuss the effects of the Government's economic policy on child poverty.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend last met representatives of the CPAG in June 1990.

Denationalisation

19. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the increase in share ownership in Yorkshire as a result of denationalisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The number of adults owning shares in the Yorkshire and Humberside region has increased by over 50 per cent. since 1987. The privatisations of nationalised industries have played a significant role in introducing the benefits of share ownership to an increasing proportion of the public.

Growth Rates

20. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual growth rate between 1988 and 1992 in (a) Germany, (b) France, (c) Italy and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maples: On the basis of the figures in the December 1991 edition of the OECD's economic outlook for Germany, France and Italy and of the autumn statement for the United Kingdom: (a) 3·3 per cent.; (b) 2·5 per cent.; (c) 2 per cent; (d) 0·8 per cent.

Planning Total

21. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the planning total in 1990-91 prices (a) in 1987-88 and (b) 1988-89; and what it is for the current year.

Mr. Mellor: The outturn for the planning total, in 1990-91 prices, was £176·6 billion and £168·2 billion in 1987-88 and 1988-89, respectively. Outturn in 1991-92 is forecast to be £191·6 billion, in 1990-91 prices.

Gross Domestic Product

22. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of non-oil gross domestic product was represented by non-oil taxes and national insurance contributions in (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Mellor: 35 and 37 per cent. respectively.

Citizens Charter

23. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the purpose of the citizens charter and how it will affect the working of government.

Mr. Maude: The citizens charter is the most comprehensive programme ever for raising standards in the public sector. It will not affect Ministers' responsibilities for setting standards and allocating resources, but it will have a profound effect on the way Government services are delivered: increasing choice, quality, value and accountability to the customer. The charter mark scheme will recognise and reward those who achieve excellence in meeting the charter standard.

The citizens charter will maintain pressure on organisations to improve quality of service; increase efficiency and offer greater value for money to the taxpayer. It will remain at the very heart of the Government's programme over the next 10 years.

Investment

24. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of business investment manufacturing investment represented (a) in 1979 and (b) the third quarter of 1991.

Mr. Maples: Manufacturing investment at constant market prices represented 30 per cent. of total business investment in 1979 and 21 per cent. in the third quarter of 1991.

National Insurance

25. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the upper earnings limit on national insurance contributions.

Mr. Mellor: Only one recent representation about the upper earnings limit on national insurance contributions has been received. The TUC wrote advocating the abolition of the upper earnings limit on employees contributions.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an estimate of the public sector borrowing requirement for the end of the current financial year.

Mr. Mellor: The 1991 autumn statement forecast a PSBR in 1991-92 of £10½ billion. The next forecast will be given in the Budget.

Car Taxation

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the motor industry about the taxing of cars.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from a wide crosssection of the motor industry. Both I and my right hon. Friend have also met a number of delegations from the industry.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total tax take in the last year for which figures are available of special car tax and VAT levied on the sale of a new car.

Mr. Maples: In 1990-91 car tax raised £1·5 billion, and an estimated £2·7 billion was raised from VAT levied on new cars.

Money Supply

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average annual increase in the real money supply (a) from 1970 to 1973, (b) from 1973 to 1979 and (c) since 1979.

Mr. Maples: The information is as follows:

Money supply average annual increase in real terms[1]
Percentage growth

	M0	M4
1 January 1970 to 31 December 1973	−0·1	8·4
1 January 1974 to 31 December 1979	−2·7	−2·6
1 January 1980 to 31 December 1991	−1·9	7·0

[1] Based on the retail prices index as the deflator.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current amount of Britain's overseas investment; and what was the comparable figure 10 years ago

Mr. Maples: The estimated level of overseas direct and portfolio investment by United Kingdom residents at the end of 1990 was £312 billion, compared with £52 billion at the end of 1980. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Privatisation

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table to show the publicly owned assets which are still to be privatised, the Government's estimated value of each of these assets and the total value and the liability of each such asset and how much public money would be required to write off such liabilities before sale to the private sector.

Mr. Maude: The major privatisation candidates are British Technology Group, Northern Ireland Electricity, British Coal and British Rail. The proceeds likely to be obtained depend on market conditions at the time of sale and decisions yet to be taken. The cost to the Exchequer of recapitalisation prior to sale for any privatisation candidate will depend on future decisions and will be announced in due course in the usual way.

Engineering Products

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing for each year since 1970 the relative profitability of exports of engineering products on a similar basis to column 6 of the table F3 of the "Money Review of External Trade Statistics."

Mr. Maples: No. The measure of profitability to which the hon. Member refers requires compatible indices of export unit values and producers' output prices, which are available for manufacturing as a whole but not for its components.

Ambassadorial Limousines

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will outline Treasury policy in connection with the remittance of moneys received on the sale by one of Her Majesty's embassies of an ambassadorial limousine;

(2) if he will consider allowing Her Majesty's embassies to retain the proceeds of Rolls-Royce motor cars sold out of service in order to facilitate the purchase of a new one.

Mr. Mellor: Receipts from the sale of official vehicles are retained by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. They are appropriated in aid of the vote—class II, vote 1. —along with other similar receipts. Any receipts above the level shown in the estimate have to be surrendered as Consolidated Fund extra receipts.

EC Finance

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what sums were paid to the EC by each of the member states for each of the last six financial years; what is the projection for the current financial year; and what sums were received by each state from the EC for the same years.

Mr. Maude: Total contributions to the EC budget by each member state for the years 1986-1990, together with an estimate of contributions for 1991 and 1992 are in the table. Outturn information on member states' contributions in 1991 will be given in the 1991 Court of Auditors' report due for publication in December 1992.

Charities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated annual cost of exempting all registered charities from liability for value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information about the amount of value added tax borne by charities is not collated centrally but it is estimated that charities pay between £180 million and £250 million in value added tax each year.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of (a) the additional revenue accruing in 1991-92 and in 1992-93 respectively, from the increase in value added tax to 17½ per cent. and (b) the total additional expenditure incurred in each year from the change in the rate of value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: (a) The increase in VAT from 15 to 17½ per cent. will produce an estimated additional £3,900 million in receipts in 1991-92 and £5,515 million in 1992-93.

(b) The VAT rate was increased in the 1991 Budget as part of a switch from local to central Government taxation. The overall effect on purchasing power and consumer demand of this switch is broadly neutral so we do not expect the level of total expenditure to have changed significantly.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cash amount paid in value added tax by a family with two children on average earnings in 1979; and what is his latest estimate for the amount now.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A married couple with two children on average male earnings is estimated to have paid £6·55 a week in VAT in 1978-79 at 1991-92 prices. It is estimated that a similar family will pay £17·65 a week in 1991-92.

CBI Manufacturing Council

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has yet received any representations from the newly established manufacturing council of the CBI; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I have not received any representations from the manufacturing council of the CBI.

Inflation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average inflation rate (i) from 1974 to 1979 and (ii) since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: Between December 1973 and December 1979 the average annual rate of inflation, as measured by the retail prices index, was 16 per cent. per annum. This compares with 6·9 per cent. for the period December 1979 to December 1991.

Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the output figures used in CSO press notice CSO(92)14 for November using current instead of 1985 weights.

Mr. Mellor: Information, using weights later than 1985, is not available and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Trade Figures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the sets of trade figures for 1991 and for the latest quarter as a percentage of 1985, in the form used in CSO press notice CSO(92)15, using 1991 weighting.

Mr. Mellor: No. The press notice referred to by the hon. Member gives trade volume and unit value indices using 1985 weights and, following well-established procedures, will be rebased on 1990 in the course of 1993.

Customs Office, Dartmouth

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the proposed closure of the customs office in Dartmouth, south Devon; and what steps are being taken in response to the increase in drug trafficking in the south-west.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The completion of the single market on 1 January 1993 will mean that fiscal and customs formalities at internal EC frontiers will be removed permitting the freest movement of legitimate traffic and passengers. However anti-smuggling checks will remain and these will be focused on major dangers to society such as drugs, instruments of terrorism and child pornography.

The effects of the single market on staffing in the Customs and Excise department are particularly significant in ports and airports that deal predominantly with traffic arriving from other EC countries, which is the case in Dartmouth. Consequently the department has had to examine carefully both the numbers and location of staff in such areas.

In determining future customs anti-smuggling resources, the aim has been to provide a service which is better equipped and targeted at areas of highest risk. A further consideration is the more flexible approach being adopted in the way the controls are organised; this moves away from the static controls previously used.

This approach has been adopted nationally as a result of the review of anti-smuggling controls completed by the department in 1989. The changes in no way reduce the effectiveness of controls against drug trafficking. Customs is also taking steps to ensure provision of more timely and adequate intelligence.

A flexible anti-smuggling team is based in Plymouth which covers the south Devon area and additionally it is proposed to retain a Customs presence at both Brixham and Salcombe.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in November 1990, the Economic Secretary took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Maples: No.

Income Tax

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue effect in (a) 1992-93 and (b) a full year if (i) all personal tax allowances except the single person's allowance, (ii) employee contributions to occupational pensions, (iii) contributions to personal pensions, (iv) reliefs other than those listed at (i) to (iii) above, (v) a combination of (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv), (vi) a combination of (i), (ii) and (iii), (vii) a combination of (ii) and (iii), (viii) a combination of (ii), (iii) and (iv), (ix) a combination of (ii) and (iv) and (x) a combination of (iii) and (iv), were restricted to the basic rate, giving the numbers affected in each case, distinguishing between (1) basic rate taxpayers and (2) higher rate taxpayers and giving the number who are brought into higher rate tax in each case for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: Estimates of the increase in liability to income tax in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income are given in the following table:

Yield following restriction of specified allowances and reliefs to the basic rate

		£ million
(i)	All allowances except the personal allowance	300
(ii)	Occupational pension contributions	250
(iii)	Personal pension contributions	150
(iv)	All reliefs other than pension contributions	150
(v)	A combination of (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv)	900
(vi)	A combination of (i), (ii) and (iii)	750
(vii)	A combination of (ii) and (iii)	400
(viii)	A combination of (ii), (iii) and (iv)	550
(ix)	A combination of (ii) and (iv)	400
(x)	A combination of (iii) and (iv)	300

About 1·8 million taxpayers would be affected by the restriction of all allowances, except the personal allowance, and reliefs to the basic rate of whom 1·5 million are currently liable at the higher rate and 0·3 million at the basic [illegible].

The estimates of revenue yield do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from such restrictions.

I regret that it is not possible to provide estimates for 1992-93.

EC Economic Convergence

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he proposes to measure convergence between the economies of European Community member states.

Mr. Maude: The Maastricht treaty emphasises four criteria for assessing economic convergence. These criteria concern the levels of inflation and interest rates; membership of the narrow band of the ERM; and avoidance of excessive budget deficits.

ECOFIN

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outocme of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Maples: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels on 10 February. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the Irish Government's programme for economic convergence, and welcomed their achievements to date in reducing inflation and putting their public finances on a sound basis. The Council encouraged Ireland to continue with its policies to reduce its very high level of unemployment through tax reform, improved flexibility, adaptation of industrial policy and wage moderation. The Irish commitment to reduce its public debt to 89 per cent. of GDP in 1993 was also noted as a sign of its Government's determination to continue budgetary consolidation. The Council invited the Commission and the monetary committee to monitor the implementation of the programme and to report back to the Council before the end of 1992.

The Council also carried out its biannual examination of the Community's economic situation, noting the current low growth and high unemployment in the Community and focusing on the need for greater convergence especially in the areas of inflation, labour market flexibility and savings. The Council noted that structural rigidities, especially labour market inflexibility, were major obstacles to price stability, catching up and lower unemployment. It was also agreed that an adequate level of savings is required to maintain investment and economic growth, to support capital accumulation in poorer regions and to allow the Community to meet its external commitments. The Council invited the Commission, the committee of governors and the monetary and economic policy committees to examine these issues further in time for the next multilateral surveillance exercise.

The annual economic report for 1991-92 was adopted without discussion.

The Commission confirmed to the Council that the problems which had delayed the disbursement of a 500 mecu food credit for Russia appeared to have been solved. It was agreed that the first tranche of the separately agreed 1·25 becu loan should also be made available to those other states of the former Soviet Union who had signed a memorandum of understanding with official creditors about the debts of the former Soviet Union. It was also agreed that EC members would work to ensure that the states of the former Soviet Union can become members of the IMF as soon as possible.

The Council accepted the presidency proposals to resolve the outstanding issues in respect of the adoption of the 1992 Community budget. A revision to the financial perspective was agreed which would meet the Council's particular concerns over research and make available up to 450 mecu for technical assistance to the former Soviet Union.

Agreement was also reached on the outstanding detailed issues surrounding the draft directive on the arrangements for the holding, movement and control of goods subject to excise duty, which had been agreed in principle by the Council on 16 December. The directive can now be formally adopted at a future Council meeting without further discussion. The Council also emphasised the importance of adopting the directives on excise duty structures and rates which are currently under discussion and set targets for doing so at the end of April and the end of June respectively.

The presidency outlined an ambitious programme for making progress in the single market and the Commission drew attention to the need to make progress in agreeing directives in the field of company taxation.

Profit Margins

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the reduction in profit margins in manufacturing industry since the end of 1989 as a percentage of sales and the effect that that has had on (a) the rate of inflation, (b) the export price of manufactured goods and (c) the value and volume of imports and exports of manufactured goods.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 February 1992]: The rate of inflation, trade prices and trade volumes depend on a wide range of interrelated factors and it is not possible to isolate the effects of changes in profit margins.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect to date of membership of the exchange rate mechanism on the profitability of United Kingdom manufacturing industry; what is his forecast for 1992; and what effect membership has had and is expected to have on output and employment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 February 1992]: Profitability, output and employment depend on a range of factors. ERM membership has reinforced anti-inflationary policy and brought greater exchange rate stability, thereby enabling businesses across the United Kingdom to plan and invest with greater certainty. Since joining the ERM, we have been able to reduce interest rates on eight occasions by a total of 4½ percentage points.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Personal Information

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to allow a consumer to consent to, or be aware of, those uses and disclosures of personal information not obvious at the time the consumer provides the information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Existing legislation provides for individuals in certain circumstances to be aware that information which they disclose about themselves may be used for marketing and other purposes and give them the opportunity to object. I have no plans to introduce any further controls in this area.

RECHAR Grants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what applications have been made for RECHAR grants in relation to Nottingham; what payments have been made; and when he expects the European Commission to make the outstanding payments.

Mr. Leigh: The United Kingdom made applications for 11 coalfield areas, including Nottingham, in July 1990. The European Commission has yet to approve them, and no RECHAR money has so far been released to the United Kingdom. We hope that the Commission will approve these applications very soon.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to allow local authorities to negotiate and conclude agreements for RECHAR grants without any involvement of central Government; and what information he has on current practice in this regard in each of the other EC countries.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 February 1992]: No. I understand that such is not the practice in any member state.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the expenditure and achievements of his Department in north Yorkshire during 1991; and what was the comparable position between June 1979 and May 1980.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The table lists grants offered to firms in north Yorkshire under the regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grants and the small firms merit award for research and technology schemes, together with the number of cases where terms of reference were agreed under the enterprise initiative subsidised consultancy scheme. Figures for regional development grants in 1979 are not available.

	June 1979 to May 1980 (£)	January to December 1991 (£)
Regional selective assistance[1]	927,716	4,920
Regional enterprise grants[2]	—	41,375
Small firms merit award for research and technology[3]	—	330,000
Enterprise initiative consultancies[4] (number)	—	107

[1] Following the review of the AA map in November 1984 only Whitby remained eligible for regional aid in north Yorkshire.

[2] Scheme started April 1988.

[3] Scheme started June 1988.

[4] Scheme started January 1989.

HEALTH

Drugs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what ACE inhibitor drugs are licensed for use in the United Kingdom; what guidance has been issued to family health service authorities and general practitioners on the use of such drugs; and what was the expenditure per head in each NHS region on such drugs during the period April to October 1991 in the PACT data system.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the tables.

1. ACE inhibitor drugs licensed for use in the United Kingdom:

Drug Name
Capoten
Capozide
Innovace
Staril
Carace
Coversyl
Accupro
Tritace
Vascace
Zestril

2. Net ingredient cost (£) per head for ACE inhibitors April 1991 to September 1991 inclusive.

Regional Health Authority	Net Ingredient Cost per head (£)
Northern RHA	0·82
Yorkshire RHA	0·85
Trent RHA	0·81
East Anglia RHA	0·73
North West Thames RHA	0·75
North East Thames RHA	0·78
South East Thames RHA	0·84
South West Thames RHA	0·85
Wessex RHA	1·03
Oxford RHA	0·83
South Western RHA	0·99
West Midlands RHA	0·85
Mersey RHA	1·00
North Western RHA	0·91
England	0·86

Note: The expenditure data used are the net ingredient cost of ACE Inhibitors for the period April to September 1991 inclusive and have been obtained from the Prescription Pricing Authority. The data are actual and take account of all prescriptions dispensed including dispensing doctors. The population figures used are based on the OPCS estimate of resident population for mid-year 1990.

3. Although no specific guidance has been issued to FHSAs and GPs on the use of ACE inhibitors, guidance is contained in the British National Formulary which is distributed by the Department, free of charge, to all prescribing doctors and in the data sheets supplied by the companies which market these drugs.

Home Care Agencies

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to arrange for the registrations of all private and voluntary home care agencies; and how many representations he received advocating this move during 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 24 January at column 396. During 1991 representations were received from a small number of organisations.

Respite Care (Children)

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to amend the Children Act 1989 to prohibit local authorities charging parents for the provision of respite care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The Children Act continues the longstanding provision for a contribution to the maintenance of a child looked after by the local authority. It makes no distinction between the provision of short term pre-planned placements—respite care—and longer-term provision of accommodation. Both fall within the range of services for which local authorities have discretion as to charging. In exercising that discretion, local authorities are required to have regard to the means of the child concerned, where the service is provided to a child aged 16 or over, or his parents, where the child is under sixteen. Local authorities cannot charge for services where the child—or his/her parents depending on the child's age—is on income support. Where there is disagreement as to what is a "reasonable" charge there are provisions within the Children Act enabling the matter to be referred to the courts for resolution.

Leighton Hospital, Crewe and Mid-Cheshire Hospital Trust

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the changes in senior nursing staff which are taking place at Leighton hospital, Crewe;

(2) what information he has received from the Mid-Cheshire hospital trust of the re-grading of senior nurses, the numbers involved and the specialties which will no longer have the same ratio of trained staff of G grade level and above available for patient care.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Richard F. Lawrence, the chairman of the Mid-Cheshire hospital trust, for details.

HIV

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that dental care is readily available to people who are HIV positive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Dental care of HIV positive patients as with any other patient is provided by general dental practitioners. Any individual who has difficulty in obtaining dental treatment is advised to contact his family health services authority.

GP Practices

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners practices there are in the Thurrock parliamentary constituency with (a) more than 9,000 patients, (b) between 7,000 and 9,000 patients, (c) between 5,000 and 7,000 patients, (d) between 3,000 and 5,000 patients, (e) between 1,000 and 3,000 patients and (f) fewer than 1,000 patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Prescription Charges

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on NHS prescription and other charges and the value of optical vouchers from 1st April 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I shall shortly lay before the House regulations providing for increases in prescription charges in the National Health Service in England and Wales which will take effect on 1 April 1992. The prescription charges will increase by 35p from £3·40 to £3·75 for each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed. Spectacle vouchers—which are available to people on low incomes—go up by 9·5 per cent.

Concurrently regulations are being laid by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to increase the charges in Scotland by the same amount. Similar arrangements will apply in Northern Ireland.

The new charge will continue to represent less than half the average total cost of a single prescription item to the NHS. The existing wide-ranging exemption arrangements will remain unchanged. Rates for prepayment certificates will rise in line with the increase in prescription charges. A prescription charge is now paid on about one item in six dispensed in the NHS. When the Government took office, one item in three attracted a charge. In 1990-91, the drugs bill was nearly £2·1 billion. The increase will raise about £240 million for the NHS.

Charges for elastic stockings and tights, fabric supports and wigs supplied through the hospital service will also be increased from 1 April 1992 by a similar percentage to the rise in the prescription charge.

There is no change to the proportional charge—75 per cent.—for general dental services. However the maximum charge will be raised to £225 with effect from 1 April 1992.

I am pleased to announce that as from 1 April 1992 the overall value of optical vouchers will increase by 9·5 per cent. I have also, in response to representations increased the number of voucher bands from six to eight so as to reflect more accurately the range of manufacturer's wholesale prices.

The result of these changes will be that the majority of voucher holders will find themselves considerably better off. In particular, the value of voucher A, the commonest voucher, will increase by 20·3 per cent.; voucher B will increase by 20·1 per cent.; and users requiring complex single vision lenses will find the value of their voucher increased by 104·1 per cent.

I am also pleased to announce that from 1 April 1992 charges made to patients for the use of oxygen concentrators in the home will be discontinued.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for each district health authority, and the national total, the amount of money still remaining at January 1991 in budgets which have been set aside for extra-contractual referrals in 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 30 January 1992]: Information about individual district health authorities' reserves for extra-contractual referrals is not held centrally. Our most recent information based on the regional returns made in January 1992 shows that nationally around £53 million—26 per cent.—of the reserves set aside for extra-contractual referrals remains for the last quarter of the year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kurds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will take steps to instigate a debate in the United Nations on the massacre of Kurd civilians in 1988, with a view to establishing a United Nations investigation into allegations of genocide related specifically to those atrocities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Iraq's appalling human rights record is already under scrutiny at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva. The United Nations has appointed a special rapporteur to report on human rights in Iraq. He has our full support. These latest reports simply underline Saddam Hussein's total disregard for international norms of behaviour.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Ministers of State took part in party political activities in addition to official duties during each of their visits to Hong Kong in (a) February and June 1988, (b) January and September 1989 and (c) April, July and September 1990.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend Lord Glenarthur saw fellow Conservatives in June 1988 and my hon. Friend the Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. Maude) in April and July 1990. My noble Friend the Minister of State also met them in September 1990.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, on each of his visits to Hong Kong in (a) May 1988, (b) July 1989 and (c) January 1990, he took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Surrey, East (Sir G. Howe) saw fellow Conservatives briefly during his visit to Hong Kong in May 1988, but not in July 1989 and neither did I in January 1990.

Mr. and Mrs. Orton Chirwa

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the conditions of the imprisonment of Mr. and Mrs. Orton Chirwa in Malawi; if he will make renewed efforts to seek their release; and whether he will set a date beyond which all aid to Malawi will be suspended, unless they are released.

Mr. Chalker: We have received reports that Mr. and Mrs. Chirwa's health has deteriorated because of the conditions under which they are held. We have therefore asked the Malawian Government for their release on humanitarian grounds. The Malawian Government have been informed that future aid levels will be influenced by their performance on human rights.

Human Rights

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all outstanding cases against the United Kingdom at the European Commission on Human Rights which have been declared admissible by the Commission but have not yet been considered by or referred to either the court or the Committee of Ministers, giving their names, application numbers and their subject matter.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are nine cases outstanding against the United Kingdom at the European Commission on Human Rights which have been declared admissible by the Commission but have not yet been considered by or referred to either the European Court of Human Rights or the Committee of Ministers:

Number, name and subject matter
15767/89 Clarke—discretionary life sentence
16632/90 Colman—doctors' advertising restrictions
15058/89 Darnell—length of medical disciplinary proceedings
14778/80 Higgins—provision of legal aid
15861/89 M—provision of legal aid
14310/88 Murray and others—entry and search of the family home
13195/[illegible]7 P and others—discretionary life sentences
16212/[illegible]0 R—provision of legal aid
14830/89 Yousef—immigration

Syria

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the release of Mu'taz Qutlabi, held in Fir Amn al-Dawa, Damascus, and of the imminent release of other political prisoners in Syria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no specific information on the individual mentioned. We are trying to obtain verification and further details of the recently reported release by the Syrian authorities of 2,864 political prisoners.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps will be taken to ensure that those who suffer from myalgic encephalomyelitis will be entitled to invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: Entitlement to invalidity benefit does not depend on the nature of a person's incapacity for work. People suffering from myalgic encephalomyelitis may qualify if they satisfy the entitlement conditions. We have no plans to make special provision for people suffering from this particular condition.

Sick Pay

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the different rates of statutory sick pay at current and at 1991 prices, and as percentages of gross average earnings and average earnings net of income tax and national insurance contribution, in each year since statutory sick pay replaced national insurance sickness benefit.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

Child Benefit

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to increase child benefit for all children to the level it would have been if it had been uprated in line with inflation since 1987.

Mr. Scott: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made clear on a number of occasions, we are committed to increasing the current level of child benefit in line with inflation. Child benefit is and will remain a strong element in our policies for family support. From 1988 we have introduced extra help for families on income-related benefits which will amount to over £600 million in 1992-93. This, together with last year's increases in child benefit, means that the current level of overall expenditure on families with children is now greater than it would have been if we had simply uprated child benefit each year after 1987 in line with inflation.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing child benefit plus the national insurance long-term addition for children of (a) widows and (b) invalidity pensioners, at current and at 1991 prices, and as percentages of gross average earnings and average earnings net of income tax and national insurance contributions, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The figures, which are the same for widows and invalidity pensioners, are in the table:

A Uprating date	B Rate of Child Benefit plus Child Dependency Increase	C Equivalent value of benefit at April 1991 prices			D Gross male weekly average earnings with amounts in column B as percentage		E Equivalent net week earnings with amounts in column B as percentage

[1] Where the new higher rate of Child Benefit for the eldest qualifying child applied, the Child Dependency Increase was adjusted so that the total level of support remained the same for all children.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Egypt

Ms. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much all donors are contributing to the World bank and social fund to mitigate the social impact of economic reform in Egypt.

Mrs. Chalker: We understand that the following pledges have been made to the social fund project in the Arab Republic of Egypt, in addition to an International Development Association loan of SDR105 million—$140 million—approved in June 1991:

Donors	$ million
European Community	140
USAID	55
Arab Fund	50

Donors	$ million
Kuwait Fund	50
Aub Dhabi Fund	50
Switzerland	30
Germany	30
Denmark	10
Canada	10
France	10
Sweden	10
Netherlands	6
Austria	5
UNDP	4
Norway	2
Total (including IDA)	602

Tropics (Biodiversity)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each programme supported by the Overseas Development Administration for research and development of the biodiversity of the tropics since 1987, with the funds allocated to each in each year and the annual totals.

Mrs. Chalker: We funded 62 projects on biodiversity from central research and development funds in 1987-88, 58 projects in 1988-89 and 43 projects in 1989-90. I am placing in the Library a list of projects in each year, including the total cost of each project and the cost to ODA in each financial year. Information relating to 1990-91 will be contained in ODA's report on research and development for that year, which is in preparation. ODA is one of the largest contributors to the International Board for Plant Genetics Resources.

Biodiversity Programmes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what priority the Minister of Overseas Development has given to the forestry discipline within the Overseas Development Administration's biodiversity programmes.

Mr. Chalker: We made it clear in the ODA's publication "Biological Diversity and Developing Countries: Issues and Options", June 1991, that tropical forests, which may contain over 90 per cent. of species, have a very high priority within our support to biodiversity programmes in developing countries.

ODA Staff (Qualifications)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff of the Overseas Development Administration have qualifications in forestry.

Mrs. Chalker: Three advisers in the Overseas Development Administration's London headquarters and 17 staff at the ODA's agency, the natural resources institute, have qualifications in foresty. In addition, there are 15 similarly qualified people serving overseas on technical co-operation assignments.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1988, the Minister for Overseas Development took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Summit on the Advancement of Rural Women

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department will be sending a representative to the summit on the advancement of rural women to be held in Geneva later this month.

Mrs. Chalker: Representation will be provided by the United Kingdom mission to the United Nations in Geneva.

Horn of Africa

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government's contribution will be to the SEPHA appeal for the Horn of Africa for the period February to July 1992.

Mrs. Chalker: I have this week approved a British contribution of £23 million to the appeal. The contribution is made up as follows:

	£ million
Food Aid
(i) Ethiopia, including Eritrea 20,000 tonnes	[1]12
(ii) Sudan 25,000 tonnes
Non-food Aid
(i) UNHCR activities in the Horn	5
(ii) British NGO humanitarian activities in the Horn	6
	23

[1] Approximate.

This pledge is additional to the £107 million, including 185,000 tonnes of food aid and our share of EC emergency aid, which we have committed for humanitarian relief in the Horn of Africa since the present crisis began in September 1990. The food aid total included £2·2 million for Somalia which I announced in January this year.

International Fund for Agricultural Development

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why it has been decided not to contribute funds to the special famine relief programme run by the International Fund for Agricultural Development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider his decision not to make available funds to assist the United Nations International Fund for Agricultural Development's special programme for Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 12 February.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 13 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Press Freedom

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on the freedom of the press; and what steps have been taken to implement his policy since 1979.

The Prime Minister: The Government are committed to safeguarding the freedom of the press. They consider this is best secured by responsible journalism and effective self-regulation. In pursuit of this policy the Government have supported the recommendations of the Calcutt committee for a non-statutory Press Complaints Commission. We are committed to reviewing the effectiveness of the new arrangements later this year.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Durham Education Authority

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent per pupil by Durham education authority in (a) current expenditure and (b) capital expenditure in 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Fallon: Spending per pupil in nursery schools, primary schools and secondary schools in Durham is shown in the table. The table shows actual spending in 1979-80 and in 1989-90, the latest year for which the information is available, at both current and 1989-90 prices.

Year	Current prices		1989-90 prices[3]
	Net institutional expenditure[1] per pupil[2] (£)	Capital expenditure per pupil (£)	Net institutional expenditure[1] per pupil[2] (£)	Capital expenditure per pupil (£)
1979-80	505	30	1,010	60
1989-90	1,430	55	1,430	55

[1] Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure.

[2] The figures are derived from Durham Local Education Authority's returns of its spending to the Department of the Environment and of its pupil numbers to the Department of Education and Science.

[3] Figures for 1979-80 have been repriced to 1989-90 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator index.

Taxonomic Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's policy on the funding of taxonomic research in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department funds research through its grants from the science budget to the research councils and through the higher education funding councils which provide block grants to higher education institutions.

In deciding the overall level of funding to be made avaialble, and the allocation of the science budget to individual research councils, the Government take account of advice from the funding councils and from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. It is then for individual research councils and higher education institutions to decide how to deploy the resources made available to them, including the level of funding for taxonomic research.

Student Grants

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing mandatory grant levels for students pursuing first degree courses, at current and at constant 1991 prices in each year since 1979; and if he will also show net maximum parental contributions as percentages of average earnings in the same years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The table shows the value of the mandatory grant[1], in cash terms and at 1991 prices, and the maximum assessed parental contribution as percentage of average earnings for 1979-80 to 1991-92. The contribution assessed for parents on average earnings in any year would be considerably less than the maximum contribution figure shown in the table. Further, the assessed contribution for any parent cannot exceed the maintenance grant to which the student is entitled.

Academic year	Grant in cash terms	1991 value of grant	Stautory maximum contribution
			In cash terms	As per cent. of average earnings
	£	£
1979-80	1,245	2,832	n/a	n/a

1985-86	1,830	2,578	4,000	45
1986-87	1,901	2,600	4,300	45
1987-88	1,972	2,589	4,600	44
1988-89	2,050	2,543	4,900	43
1989-90	2,155	2,485	5,300	42
1990-91	2,265	2,355	5,800	42
1991-92	2,265	2,265	5,800	39

n/a = Not applicable. Between 1979-80 and 1984-85 there was no statutory maximum parental contribution.

Note:

Rate applicable to students living away from the parental home and studying at an institution outside London. From 1990-91 student loans were available of up to £420 in 1990-91 and £580 in 1991-92 (at the outside London rate).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Circaprint NI Ltd.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date Circaprint NI Ltd. went into receivership; which company was appointed as receivers; what action has been taken to date by the appointed receivers to enable redundant workers to receive moneys to which they are entitled; and if he will seek to expedite settlement of outstanding claims lodged by former employees.

Mr. Needham: Joint administrative receivers were appointed to the parent company Circaprint Holdings Plc on 5 April 1991. No receiver was, however, appointed to Circaprint (NI) Ltd. and the Department of Economic Development has therefore undertaken, under article 47 of the Industrial Relations (NI) Order 1976, to discharge such of the functions of a receiver as are necessary to ensure that former employees of the Northern Ireland company receive payment of holiday pay, pay in lieu of notice and redundancy payments to which they are entitled.

It is anticipated that qualifying claims will be paid not later than the end of February 1992.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total value of grants paid towards the cost of all plant and equipment including installation costs from start up until closure of Circaprint NI Ltd.

Mr. Needham: £949,721.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in December 1989, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Needham: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish figures showing the total budget of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in Wales in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Curry: The budgetary costs for the Agricultural Development Advisory Service, as currently constituted in Wales for the last three years and the current year to date are as follows:

	£000's
1988-89	[1]5,950
1989-90	[1]5,878
1990-91	[1]5,780
[2]1991-92	3,541

[1] Includes costs of Trawsgoed experimental husbandry farm transferred to the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research on 31 March 1991.

[2] To end December 1991.

Prior to this separate delegated budgets for Wales are not identifiable, and figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are currently employed by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in Wales; and if he will publish the total numbers employed within each experimental husbandry farm.

Mr. Curry: There are currently 177 permanent staff employed by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in Wales and 12 of these staff are employed at Pwllpeiran experimental husbandry farm.

Mink Farming

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that mink farms do not release mink into the wild.

Mr. Maclean: All mink farms are inspected annually by Ministry officials to ensure that they meet the security standards required by the Mink (Keeping) Regulations 1975, as amended.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements his Department has made to consult interested parties before preparation of a draft EC directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 6 February, Official Report, column 450.

Pollution Control

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures the Government intends to introduce to enable United Kingdom farmers to meet new pollution control requirements.

Mr. Curry: As my right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 21 January, a pilot study will be set up to see if farmers can reduce water pollution by preparing and implementing plans for the safe disposal of animal manure, slurry and other organic wastes. Later this year the Department will issue a code of good agricultural practice for the protection of air. These will supplement existing measures including 50 per cent. grant aid for waste storage facilities and free general advisory visits by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service on pollution avoidance.

Tropical Forest Resource Group

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the work programme of the tropical forest resource group at the royal botanic gardens, Kew.

Mr. Curry: The tropical forest resource group, which was launched on 29 January 1992, is a consortium of 11 organisations including the royal botanic gardens at Kew. Its aim is to provide information and expertise to project and policy developers worldwide in the areas of forest management and conservation, agroforestry and related land use. Kew's role will be to provide support in its special fields of taxonomic research on plants and fungi, with additional capabilities in experimental research, seed storage and horticulture.

Agricultural Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to how many consultations from local planning authorities relating to individual planning applications for non-agricultural development his Department responded in each six months since January 1988; if he will provide for each period the number of objections, conditional objections, appraisals, no objections and cases which were either withdrawn or in which the referal was inappropriate; and how many hectares of each grade of agricultural land, including 3a, 3b and 3c, were involved in each period.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested for England and Wales is as follows:

	1 January 1988 to 30 June 1988	1 July 1988 to 31 December 1988	1 January 1989 to 30 June 1989	1 July 1989 to 31 December 1989	1 January 1990 to 30 June 1990	1 July 1990 to 31 December 1990

Note:
"Conditional response" includes both conditional acceptances and objections.

Revised guidelines and criteria introduced for grading the quality of agricultural land provided for two subgrades of grade 3 land: 3a and 3b, the latter being a combination of the previous 3b and 3c.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, colums 445-46, if he will list for each year since 1980 the number of applications which were rejected by his Ministry and were subsequently refused by the local authorities concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The records do not show this information.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the amount of agricultural land in England in each grade, including 3a and 3b, in (a) 1986 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Gummer: The published agricultural land classification maps and data are based on strategic planning work carried out in the 1960s and do not sub-divide grade 3 land. The original survey showed the proportion of land in each grade in England to be as follows:

	per cent.
Grade 1	3·3
Grade 2	16·7
Grade 3	54·0
Grade 4	15·7
Grade 5	10·3

The agricultural land classification maps and data provide only a very general indication of the distribution of land quality. Resurveying at a larger scale is necessary to obtain a definitive grade for individual sites.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council on 10 to 11 February.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the Council together with my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), Parliamentary Secretary in my Department, and my noble Friend Lord Strathclyde, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland.

Discussion concentrated on the Commission's proposals for CAP reform. The Portuguese presidency presented a new compromise paper which may have moved matters forward by a small amount, but major divergencies of view remain. I was one of several Ministers who said that they would not be able to come to final decisions until the outcome of the current GATT round were known. Otherwise I maintained the United Kingdom position on the lines I have explained to the House on several occasions. Discussion will resume at the next meeting of the Council starting on 2 March.

The Commissioner said that he would bring forward a package of structural proposals, which were intended to help the Community's soft fruit industry. This follows the representations I have made about the difficulties caused for the United Kingdom industry by low-priced imports from eastern Europe.

Bananas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the consequences of the proposal in the draft general agreement on tariffs and trade text, that import controls on bananas should be converted into a tariff on African, Caribbean and Pacific banana producers.

Mr. Gummer: The draft general agreement on tariffs and trade text calls for all border measures other than ordinary customs duties applying to agricultural products to be converted into tariff equivalents and for current access opportunities to be maintained on terms at least equivalent to those existing. The tariff equivalent would in principle be applied to all dollar banana imports above current access volumes. It is unclear whether the tariff equivalent would have to be paid on African, Caribbean and Pacific sendings above their current level; nevertheless, fruit up to that volume would continue to enter the Community duty free.

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the amount in pounds sterling spent on the common agricultural policy in 1991; what are the current forecasts of expenditure for 1992, 1993 and 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The amount spent on the common agricultural policy in 1991 was £24,105 million[1]. The common agricultural policy budget for 1992 is £27,836 million[1]—which includes £697 million[1] for the monetary reserve. It is not normal practice to forecast anticipated expenditure for subsequent years, which depend on decisions yet to be taken.

[1] Converted at £:1·435 ecu.

Food Imports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amounts and types of fruit, vegetables and meat with country of origin for food imported into the United Kingdom in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991.

Mr. Gummer: Volumes and values of imports are published in the monthly CSO Business Monitor "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom"—MM20—which is available in the Library of the House. Table III of this monitor gives both monthly and year-to-date data at the five-digit SITC level, classified by main country of consignment, not necessarily the country of origin. Figures for the first 11 months of 1991 are available in the November 1991 edition; the December 1991 edition, which will contain provisional figures for 1991, will be available later this month. Final annual figures are published in Business Monitor MA20; the 1990 edition is available in the Library of the House and the 1991 edition will be available by the end of 1992. Country of origin figures are not published but are available from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, normally through its appointed marketing agents.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 24, on BSE deaths, if he will give a month by month breakdown of the figures given for the cattle dying at age two and three.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is as follows. The figures differ from those in the previous answer as further cases with a date of onset during 1991 have been confirmed.

Month of onset 1991	Age at onset
	2 to 3 years	3 to 4 years
January	10	205
February	6	228
March	5	315
April	6	351
May	6	344
June	4	362
July	5	394
August	3	437
September	3	247
October	0	173
November	0	87
December	0	20

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest information as to the age at death of cattle diagnosed as suffering from BSE so far this year.

Mr. Maclean: Only five cases of cattle suffering from BSE have so far been confirmed in Great Britain which have a date of clinical onset in 1992. Their ages were one each at three, five and six years, and two at four years.

EMPLOYMENT

Older Workers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce special measures to help unemployed older workers re-enter the work force.

Mr. Jackson: A wide range of unemployment and training measures is already available to help older unemployed people back to work. We are also keen that all employers should give proper recognition to the qualities that older workers possess. We are therefore, setting up an advisory group on older workers, as announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on Tuesday 11 February, Official Report, columns 809-21. The group will have an important role to play in the identification and dissemination of good practice in the employment of older workers.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps have been taken to formulate new legislation to prevent unfair dismissal for all on grounds of age, to provide job security for older workers and to prevent age discrimination in job advertisements and in recruitment, in-service training, promotion and education.

Mr. Jackson: None. We do not believe that legislation is the way to tackle these issues.

Health and Safety

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the number of health and safety inspectors employed, (b) the number of visits made, (c) the number of incidents investigated and (d) the number of prosecutions for health and safety offences, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Forth: The total number of inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive for each year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	Total inspectors[1]
1 April 1979	1,426·5
1 April 1980	1,444·5
1 April 1981	1,404·0
1 April 1982	1,323·5
1 April 1983	1,276·5

1 April 1988	1,165·0
1 April 1989	1,182·5
1 April 1990	1,239·0
1 April 1991	[3]1,342·0
1 February 1992	[3]1,421·0

[1] Includes inspectors on non-inspection duties eg line management, contributing to policy or technical standards.

[2] Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate transferred to the Department of the Environment on 1 April 1987.

[3] Includes inspectors in Railway Inspectorate and Offshore Safety Division who transferred to HSE in December 1990 and April 1991 respectively.

Information on the total numbers of visits made and incidents investigated since 1979 is either not available on a consistent basis or could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The available information on the number of visits made and incidents investigated by HSE inspectors since 1983-84 is as follows:

Year	Number of visits	Number of incidents investigated[1]
1983-84	[2]30,078	[7]10,153
1984-85	[3]209,058	[7]10,449

1989-90	234,389	[10]11,556
1990-91	[5]229,079	[9]10,862

Notes:

[1] Incidents investigated are included in the total number of visits.

[2] Data for HSE's Agricultural Inspectorate (AI) only.

[3] Data for HSE's Factory Inspectorate (FI) and AI only.

[4] Data for FI, AI, and HSE's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and Inspectors in HSE's Technology Division.

[5] Data for all Inspectorates, including HSE's Mines and Quarries Inspectorate (MQI).

[6] Excluding Railway Inspectorate.

[7] Accidents and incidents investigated by FI only.

[8] Accidents, incidents and dangerous occurrences investigated by FI and AI and cases of disease/ill health investigated by AI.

[9] Accidents, incidents and dangerous occurrences investigated by FI, AI, MI and QI; and cases of disease/ill health investigated by AI.

[10] Accidents, incidents and dangerous occurrences investigated by FI, AI, MI and QI.

Information on the total number of prosecutions for health and safety offences since 1979 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The available data on the number of informations laid by HSC/E enforcing authorities (excluding local authorities) since 1979 is as follows:

Date of hearing[1]	Number of informations laid[2]
1979[3]	2,427
1980[3]	2,624
1981[4]	1,892

1989-90	2,653
1990-91[5]	2,292

[1] From 1979 to 1985, based on calendar years. 1986-87 onwards, based on year commencing 1 April.

[2] Includes, for Scotland, charges preferred.

[3] Data for FI and AI only.

[4] Data for FI, AI, and MQI only.

[5] Provisional figure.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fatal and major injuries were reported to the factories inspectorate in each year since 1979 in each (a) region and (b) sector.

Mr. Forth: The available information is provided in the tables. Prior to 1981, the only analysis available is of fatal injuries to employees by industry sector.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1990, he took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Howard: No.

Job Losses

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has issued on action taken by training and enterprise councils, the Employment Service and others in response to job losses, with particular reference to the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has recently published an information pack entitled "Local Action for Employment—Tackling Job Losses", which contains information on the help available from training and enterprise councils—TECs—and the Employment Service —ES—when redundancies occur, and on the part local action groups can play in responding to job losses. The pack contains specific examples of best practice by TECs, the ES and local action groups in redundancy situations.

The pack will be made available to companies incurring job losses and to other agencies and individuals interested in local action in response to job losses. The pack should be of assistance in helping respond to job losses on the Isle of Wight, as elsewhere. The pack may be of interest to hon. Members and copies have been placed in the Library.

Wages Councils

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces were covered by wages councils in the northern region in 1981 and 1991; how many were visited by wage council inspectors; how many were found to be paying below wage council rates; and how many were prosecuted.

Mr. Forth: The information for the northern region is as follows:

	Workplaces covered	Workplaces visited	Workplaces paying below rate	Number of employers prosecuted
1981	21,848	1,281	[1]na	1
1990	21,529	1,547	455	2
1991	[1]na	[1]na	[1]na	2

[1] Not available.

The information for 1981 relates to the Wages Councils Act 1979and information for 1990 and 1991 to the Wages Act 1986. Figures are included for 1990 because the full information for 1991 is not yet available.

WALES

Farm Investment

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of investment in plant and machinery on farms in Wales for the last year for which full figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures both at outturn and real prices for each since 1987.

Mr. David Hunt: Investment in plant and machinery on Welsh farms, in current terms and at constant 1985 prices, for 1991 and in each year since 1987 is shown in the table.

Investment in Plant and Machinery

	Current terms £ Million	Current 1985 prices £ Million

Home Helps

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the population over the age of 75 years currently receive home help in each county in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The provision of home helps for households where at least one person is aged 75 or over and the rate per 100 households is given in the following table:

	Number[1]	Rate per 100 household[2]
Clwyd	4,801	25·2
Dyfed	3,297	20·4
Gwent	7,227	41·8

[2] Number of households where the head of household is aged 75 or over as estimated by the Welsh Inter Censal Survey 1986.

Day Care Places

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many day care places per 10,000 population under the age of five years are currently available in each county within Wales; and what the equivalent figures were for each from 1979 to date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The numbers of full-time day care places provided in day nurseries and by childminders are given in the tables:

Day care places provided by local authorities and other registered premises/persons for children aged under five

Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the change in the average size of agricultural holdings in Wales in each year from 1988 to 1991, inclusive.

Mr. David Hunt: The average area of main holdings in Wales for the years requested is as follows:

	Average area per holding (hectares)
1988	49·7
1989	49·0
1990	50·4
1991	50·2

Immunologist (College of Medicine)

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action his Department is now taking regarding the establishment of a consultant immunologist at the University of Wales college of medicine.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department is seeking expert guidance on the possibility of establishing a post of consultant immunologist with appropriate staff at the University of Wales college of medicine.

Elderly and Disabled People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of funding will be made available by his Department in 1992-93 in response to local authority bids in relation to Welsh Office circular 56/91 on central funding for elderly people and those with physical and/or sensory disabilities.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I will make an announcement soon.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, columns 573-74, how much money was withheld or recovered each year under the set-aside scheme in Wales since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Set-aside year	Amount withheld (£)
1988-89	2,015·40
1989-90	2,015·40
1990-91	23,283·20

Agricultural Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of agricultural land in Wales in each grade, including 3a and 3b, in (a) 1986 and (b) 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The published agricultural land classification—ALC—maps and data are based on strategic planning work carried out in the 1960s and do not sub-divide grade 3 land. The original survey showed the proportion of land in each grade in Wales to be as follows:

	Per cent.
Grade 1	0·2
Grade 2	2·3
Grade 3	17·5
Grade 4	44·2
Grade 5	35·8

The ALC maps and data provide only a very general indication of the distribution of land quality. Resurveying at a larger scale is necessary to obtain a definitive grade for individual sites.

Rail Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the effect of the citizens charter on British Rail's operations in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I expect Wales to fully share the benefits, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, of British Rail's passengers charter which will be published shortly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will pay an official visit to Shotton, Clwyd, using the rail service provided from Crewe.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend visited Shotton in November. There are no plans for any further visits at present.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what meetings he has had with local authorities and British Rail to discuss the upgrading of the Crewe, Holyhead and Paddington, Swansea lines including electrification.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I have had several meetings with British Rail. My right hon. Friend last met Sir Bob Reid on 30 September. On 29 October my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport and I met senior British Rail executives and local authority representatives in Holyhead.

A wide range of Welsh rail issues have been discussed including upgrading of lines and electrification.

Roads

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of his plans to improve road communications between north and south Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government's policy is to continue to upgrade the A470 and A483 by means of selective improvements. Those in progress or planned on the north-south network are:

A470

1 Pentre Bach—Cefn Coed
2 Crew Pitch
3 Storey Arms Phase II
4 Storey Arms Phase III
5 Felinfach By Pass
6 Builth Wells By Pass/Llanelwedd Junction (is also part A483)
7 Smithfield Bends
8 Diversion East of Llangurig—Wern Villa
9 Carno Road Caersws
10 Commins Coch By-Pass
11 Improvements at Bwlch Oer Ddrws
12 Maes yr Helmau—Cross Foxes Phase I & II
13 Gelligemlyn—Llanelltyd Diversion Phase I & II
14 Ty Nant—Maentwrog Road Railway Station
15 Salem Place—Ty Mawr
16 Lledr Valley Improvements
17 Llanrwst By-Pass
18 Penloyn—Tanlan
19 Pentrefelin—Croesau
20 Llanbrynmair
21 Ffridd Fawr
22 Pentre Mawr
23 Tanyard Pitch
24 Irfon Bridge Bends (S of Newbridge on Wye)
25 Llandinam Village

A483 (North of Builth Wells)

1 Brynsadwrn Bends and Bridge
2 Maes yr Abad—Wern Bridge
3 Welshpool Relief Road
4 Croesfoel Roundabout—Grade Separation
5 Newtown By Pass
6 Pant—Llanymynach By Pass (Welsh Section)
7 Side support, Llythddu
8 Glascoed and Bends
9 Howey Village By Pass

Health Authorities (Deficits)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which health authorities in Wales have reported current and expected year-end deficits.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Discounting inter-year brokerage and planned movements in balances which can distort an authority's true financial position, only Mid Glamorgan HA has indicated that its overall expenditure in accruals terms, including that of its managed units in providing services for other authorities, will exceed its overall income in 1991-92. However, the scale of variance above planned expenditure is marginal, amounts to £0·5 million or 0·2 per cent. of its projected overall income. This will be covered either by a short-term cash loan from another authority or by a small movement in balances which I would expect to be rectified in 1992-93.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, on his visit to Hong Kong in September 1988, the Minister of State took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on cervical smear tests in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The all-Wales advisory group on cervical screening was established in March 1990 with the aim of formulating a unified policy for the cervical screening programme in Wales. The advisory group report was recently submitted to my right hon. Friend and will shortly be issued for consultation.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in Wales use the assisted places schools scheme giving (a) the numbers for each of the schools operating the scheme, (b) the amounts received by each of the schools and (c) estimating the numbers for the next school year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows.

School	Overall totals of APS pupils September 1991[1]	Payments to schools for fees remitted 1990-91 £
Christ College, Brecon	76	244,081
Howell's School, Denbigh	69	231,442
Howell's School, Llandaff	159	358,798
Llandovery College	48	140,381
Monmouth School	147	303,951
Monmouth School for Girls	73	140,618
Penrhos College	50	183,500
Rydal School	39	153,508
Total	661	1,756,279

[1] Form AP0 school returns to Department.

Numbers of pupils in the assisted places scheme from September 1992 will depend on the number of new entrants and those who have left school in the previous year. However, we estimate that there will be some 685 APS pupils in the next academic year.

Housing Association (Empty Properties)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Housing Association properties were empty on the last date for which figures are available; and for how long.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 7 February 1992]: Information collected by Housing for Wales shows that at 31 March 1991 the position was as follows:

	Vacant and available for letting	Vacant and not available for letting ie undergoing or awaiting works[1]	Awaiting sale
Less than six months	163	197	60
Six months to one year	14	132	8
Over one year	7	247	0
Total vacant	184	576	68

[1] Largely rundown properties purchased for renovation.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decision on local government reorganisation in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 11 February 1992]: At the appropriate time, following further consideration of the issues.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Office Costs Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he now expects to receive the Top Salaries Review Body report on the office costs allowance.

Mr. MacGregor: I expect to receive the report on the office costs allowance from the Top Salaries Review Body shortly.

DEFENCE

HMS Bristol

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Bristol was paid off; and which ship will replace her as the Dartmouth training ship.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Bristol was paid off on 14 June 1991. Her replacement for the period 15 June 1991 to 14 December 1991 was HMS Fearless. Until initial sea training is introduced in the spring, sea-going training is being provided by HMS Ariadne, HMS Broadsword and HMS Brazen.

Devon Training Squadron

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his future plans for the Dartmouth training squadron; how trainees will gain seagoing experience; and what effect these arrangements will have on the effectiveness of operational Royal Navy ships.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The sea going training provided in the Dartmouth training squadron will be replaced by initial sea training—IST—with effect from spring 1992. Young officers will undertake IST in type 22 batch 1 frigates which have been modified to provide the extra accommodation required. The operational effectiveness of the ships will be maintained in between officer training periods by their normal ships' companies.

RNR Port Diving Branch

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his intention to make the services of Royal Navy clearance divers available to assist civil authorities following the disbandment of the Royal Naval Reserve port diving branch.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Navy clearance diving teams can provide assistance to the civil authorities on a repayment basis when this can be done without detriment to their operational tasks. There are no plans to change this policy.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the requests for assistance made by civil authorities to the Royal Navy Reserve port diving branch in each of the last seven years; giving the occasions on which such services were rendered;

(2) what payments have been received by his Department in each of the last seven years from civil authorities for services rendered by the Royal Naval Reserve port divers branch;

(3) under what arrangements the services were rendered to civil authorities by Royal Naval Reserve port divers for (a) the search in the Thames following the sinking of the Marchioness, (b) the search of the berth of the Queen Elizabeth II in Southampton, (c) the survey of Her Majesty's customs vessel in Newcastle, (d) inspections following hurricane damage in Dover harbour and (e) the search of Glencorse reservoir in Midlothian to assist a police murder inquiry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Suicides

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers who have served at Fallingbostel in the last three years have committed suicide during that time.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A driver in the Royal Corps of Transport committed suicide in Fallingbostel on 11 October 1991. Additionally, a private in 1 Cheshires stationed in Fallingbostel committed suicide on 10 January 1992 while on leave in the United Kingdom.

Information is not held centrally to identify whether those soldiers who committed suicide in other places during the past three years may have been attached, or temporarily posted, to units in the Fallingbostel area.

Fallingbostel

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers have gone absent-without-leave from Fallingbostel since January 1989; and how many of those have been granted a full discharge.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Terrorists (Compensation)

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many claims have been made against the MOD in respect of fatalities and injuries which have occurred from activity by the security forces against terrorists in each of the last five years; and what sums have been paid in compensation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Claims data are not kept in the format requested. While a number of claims are received each year, the recorded data do not distinguish between terrorists and other parties.

Data Information Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what data information systems his Department has (a) agreed and (b) been consulted about with a view to taking part in; what are the criteria for inclusion in such systems; whether they will be linked to (i) the police national computer and (ii) other computer systems; what data protection provisions apply to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence currently has no data information systems physically linked to any external systems. Discussions are now taking place between the Department's security branches and the national identification bureau to allow direct access to the police national computer, PNC. Such access would not permit the exchange of information or the interrogation of an individual's criminal record and would, as now with manual inquiries, be governed by the PNC procedures which comply with the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Al-Yamamah Project

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will publish the size of receipts, and payments, and end-year balances, on the handling accounts operated by him as part of the Al-Yamamah I project;

(2) if he will list the quantities and values of items acquired by the British Government under the buy-back provisions of the Al-Yamamah I project.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not the Government's practice to comment on detailed matters concerning individual defence export sales.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the handling accounts of the Al-Yamamah I project are audited; and whether these accounts have been the subject of audit reports.

Mr. Alan Clark: All accounts of the Ministry of Defence are subject to normal audit arrangements, the results of which are reported as appropriate.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department seeks the recoup of any handling charges on departmental costs from the handling accounts forming part of the Al-Yamamah I project.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received notification of United States intentions in respect of the future of RAF Greenham Common; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States Department of Defence announced on 30 January 1992 the decision to withdraw from RAF Greenham Common in autumn 1992, returning the station to full Ministry of Defence control. We are now considering options for the future use of the base, including scope for other defence uses. Our studies are at an early stage, however, and no decisions have yet been taken.

NAAFI

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will underwrite the NAAFI to ensure that funds are available to meet staff redundancy payments and rehousing costs in case of any financial difficulties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The financial implications of the reductions in force strengths on NAAFI are currently being considered.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give NAAFI staff who lose their accommodation under the options for change process the same options on rehousing as those being offered to ex-service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. NAAFI staff are not Ministry of Defence employees and not subject to the practical constraints on entering the housing market that apply to service personnel.

Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current approved staffing level for the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich; and how many posts remained unfilled in each main specialty at the most convenient recent date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The peacetime establishment of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich, is 175 officers, 395 other ranks and 147 civilians. On 11 February 1992, 127 posts were unfilled in the following specialties:

	Posts
Anaesthetics and Resuscitation	2
Ear, Nose and Throat (Otology)	2
General Medicine	1
General Surgery	4
Ophthalmology	2
Orthopaedics	2
Plastic Surgery (and Burns)	2
Rheumatology and Rehabilitation	1
Urology	2
Supporting Staff	109

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the estimate operating costs of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich, for the current financial year together with the actual costs for the preceding five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the latest available figures of bed occupancy at the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich, for each of the main specialties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records are not kept of bed occupancy by specialty. The occupancy rate for 1990-91 for the hospital was 65·6 per cent., excluding bedded day patients.

Armed Services (Medical Support)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the current review of medical support for the armed services to be completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces expects to receive the conclusions and recommendations within the next few months.

Hong Kong (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, on their visits to Hong Kong in January and March 1988, the Ministers of State took part in party political activities in addition to official duties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ministers at the Ministry of Defence meet fellow Conservatives from time to time in the margins of public duties both in the United Kingdom and abroad.

23 Base Workshop, Wetter

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of 23 base workshop, Wetter, Germany; and when it will be closed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A study into the Army's requirements for static workshops is now in progress. No decisions have yet been taken.

Trident

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the fourth Trident submarine to (a) be ordered and (b) begin construction.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We plan to place the order following the completion of contract negotiations with Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. Construction of the vessel under long-lead funding arrangements has already begun.

SCOTLAND

Toll Bridges

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the figures for the (a) annual income and cost and (b) capital debt outstanding for toll bridges in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest published figures for toll bridges in Scotland are as follows:

	Erskine[1] 1989-90 £ million	Forth 1990-91 £ million	Tay 1990-91 £ million
Annual income (tolls revenue)	2·3	7·2	2·1
Annual cost (operating expenses including non-recurring expenditure)	0·9	3·6	[2]2·7
Other charges	[3]13·2	1·1	0·6
Total expenditure	14·1	4·7	3·3
Outstanding deficiency	95·5	11·0	6·9

[1] There is no real debt at Erskine Bridge. The bridge was built from the funds available for trunk road expenditure in Scotland. Expenditure was borne on what is now the Roads (Scotland) Vote. However, the accounts are compiled, under Treasury direction, in such a way as to show the deficiency which would exist if the bridge had been funded by borrowing.

[2] Includes £1·8 million extraordinary repairs financed from the Tay Road Bridge Joint Board's General Reserve Fund.

[3] Comprises amortisation, interest and notional sinking fund advances.

Government Grants

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what Government grants were awarded for (a) ferry services and (b) bridge projects in Scotland listed by region, for each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following grants and subsidies were awarded:

£ million

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
Tariff rebate subsidy for P and O services to Orkney and Shetland	3·5	3·8	4·2	4·3	5·0

Capital grant to British Waterways Board:
Bridge repairs to Strathclyde region	0·08	0·1	0·1	0·04	0·04

Cardiologists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of cardiologists per million population in Scotland at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of whole-time equivalent consultant cardiologists per million population in Scotland was 3·7 as at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which information is available centrally. This data are provisional and do not include general physicians who have a special interest in cardiology.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde as to what proportion of the clear-up rate for crime in his area in 1990-91 is accounted for by voluntary admissions by convicted criminals; how many detectives are employed to obtain these admissions; and when the practice ceased.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Such practices are not part of the approach to detection employed by Scottish police forces. Strathclyde police have no record of any voluntary admissions obtained in this way.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, columns 413-14, if he will now give the figures for 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

Health Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give each, for each health board in Scotland, the amounts paid in August 1991 by the prescription prescribing division to suppliers of colostomy and ileostomy appliances.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 5 February 1992]: It is not possible to separately identify colostomy and ileostomy prescriptions for August 1991 at the present time. Following are the amounts paid in August 1991 in respect of all prescriptions dispensed in August 1991 by appliance contractors. The information on appliance prescriptions dispensed by chemists is not readily available.

Training Schemes

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many youth training trainees in Scotland left schemes without receiving any recognised qualifications on the most recent figures available.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: I regret that this information is not available because no precise count is made of the number of young people leaving youth training in Scotland.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what qualifications have been obtained by participants on youth training and employment training places in Scotland in the past five years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Participants on youth training and employment training obtain a very wide variety of qualifications, but full and detailed information on the identity of those qualifications is not held centrally.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the training performance of local enterprise companies.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: The responsibility for monitoring the training performance of local enterprise companies rests with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. They have reported regularly to my right hon. Friend that the Government's guarantees on youth training and employment training are being met and that the needs of the aim group for employment training are also being catered for. In addition, regular management information on a variety of aspects of training performance is beginning to be submitted; and my right hon. Friend and I also receive a variety of less systematic information from diverse sources. The overall picture which emerges is that local enterprise companies are securing effectively the delivery of training programmes which are increasingly better matched to local economic circumstances and focused on securing a steady improvement in quality of provision, including improvements in the achievement by trainees of qualifications.

Ethnic Minority Grants

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what ethnic minority grants, along the lines of those available through training and enterprise councils in England and Wales, are available to refugees and ethnic minorities in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 12 February 1992]: There is no precise equivalent in Scotland to the ethnic minority grants available through training and enterprise councils in England and Wales; but local enterprise companies have a broader range of powers than training and enterprise councils, which enables them to assist members of ethnic minorities in a variety of ways.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1974 the numbers of patients on hospital in-patient waiting lists at 31 March.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: For any individual patient, the waiting time is more significant than the number of patients on the waiting list. The key to reducing waiting times is to increase the number of patients treated. Measured by discharges this has increased by 24 per cent. since 1979. The waiting list has been reduced by 21 per cent. over the same period.

NHS hospitals: in-patient waiting lists and discharges at 31 March

Year	Number on List	Number of Discharges
1974	[1]56,182	[1]717,964
1975	[1]53,770	[1]697,410
1976	54,442	738,633

Racial Equality

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to assist the voluntary sector in Scotland to promote racial equality and a reduction of racial disadvantage.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I am pleased to announce today the introduction of a new ethnic minority grant to assist voluntary organisations in Scotland with projects designed to promote racial equality and reduce racial disadvantage.

The new grant which has a budget of £100,000 will complement the existing funding regimes such as the urban programme and the support given to ethnic minority projects under the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. The new grant will in particular assist the voluntary sector to operate projects on a Scottish or regional level which cannot readily be funded under existing arrangements.

The Government have long recognised the benefits that can accrue from an active voluntary sector and the new grant will support voluntary organisations in their efforts to encourage and co-ordinate assistance to ethnic communities. My officials will be writing to relevant voluntary organisations with details of the scheme.

ENVIRONMENT

Dewsbury Rugby League Club

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make an announcement on the planning application by Dewsbury rugby league club at Owl lane, Dewsbury, Ref. GO/62/04666/82.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment expects to announce his decision about the planning application shortly.

Toxic Wastes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the proposals put forward by the International Chetek Corporation to destroy toxic wastes through vaporisation by underground nuclear explosions.

Mr. Baldry: We have seen reports of the proposals but no approach has been made to us by the company about them and we do not know the details. However, we would expect to take a very cautious approach to the use of peaceful nuclear technology for waste disposal.

Nuclear Waste Repository

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) of 7 February, Official Report, column 303, he will set out those organisations and individuals with whom UK Nirex Ltd. is consulting over its current proposals for an underground nuclear waste repository.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for UK Nirex Ltd.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Community Charge (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Attorney-General what action he intends to take to initiate proceedings to have Liverpool city council's city treasurer declared a vexatious litigant.

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to initiate proceedings of this kind.

Housing Repossessions

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General how many orders for repossession were granted in favour of building societies, banks or the mortgage lenders by the county court covering Neath in 1979, 1990 and 1991.

The Attorney-General: The 1979 figures are not available. The total number of mortgage possession actions entered, suspended orders and orders made during 1990 and 1991 in each county court in England and Wales is contained in two lists which have been placed in the libraries of both Houses of Parliament. These figures do not indicate how many houses have been repossessed through the courts as not all of the orders made will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. At this stage the 1991 figures are provisional and therefore liable to revision in the future.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Circaprint NI Ltd

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost to public funds of grants paid towards site acquisition and construction of the former Circaprint NI complex at Newtownabbe[illegible] Co. Antrim.

Mr. Needham: The total grant paid by the Industrial Development Board to Circaprint (NI) Ltd towards the purchase of, and improvements to, the factory buildings at Monkstown amounted to £219,378.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Industrial Development Board or Department of Economic Development will receive any repayment of grants as a result of the sale of Circaprint NI Ltd. including all grant aided plant and equipment.

Mr. Needham: The Industrial Development Board has claimed sums repayable by Circaprint (NI) Ltd. To date no repayments have been made.

Belfast Airport

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 521, which political parties have used the facilities now available at Belfast international airport.

Mr. Needham: The management of Belfast international airport is a matter for Northern Ireland Airports Ltd. However, I am advised by them that facilities at the airport have been hired by the Conservative party.

Scientific Procedure Establishments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of inspectors employed to monitor scientific procedure establishments in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Three.

Traffic Cameras

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many automatic cameras have been installed at traffic-light-controlled junctions; and how many more are planned this year.

Mr. Needham: Seventeen closed circuit television cameras have been installed for traffic signal control purposes. No additional cameras are planned this year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Regional Service Centre (Devon and Cornwall)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has reached a decision on the location of his Ministry's regional service centre for Devon and Cornwall.

Mr. Gummer: Following a further study, I have concluded that Devon and Cornwall will be served by two centres. The regional service centre, with 72 regional administrative posts, will be at Exeter; and the region's capital grant work will be carried out by a unit of 20 posts at Truro. The decision to keep a unit in Cornwall reflects my conclusion that the Ministry's responsibilities for agriculture and the general health of the rural economy are best served by maintaining an administrative presence in this isolated and remote part of the country.

This decision means that in total there will be 99 posts in Truro when account is taken of the ADAS state veterinary service and other MAFF posts which continue to be located there. The overall impact on jobs in the Truro office is minimal.

Mink Farming

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent information he has received about the decline in mink farming.

Mr. Curry: The number of mink farms in England and Wales has halved over the last three years.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teacher Training

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what date he received from the Council for Accreditation of Teachers in Education its report on the review of the training of teachers to teach reading; and when he proposes to make the report publicly available.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend received the report on 31 December. It will be issued in due course.

Schools (Finance)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his announcement of 11 February, "More Capital for Popular Schools", if he will identify (a) any additional sums of money for this purpose and (b) the rule whereby voluntary-aided schools could be allowed to expand only where there were no spare places in county schools nearby.

Mr. Fallon: The decision on the additional resources to be set aside each year to enable popular schools to expand will be taken in the light of next year's public expenditure.

It has hitherto been the policy of successive Governments not normally to make capital available to allow voluntary-aided schools to expand their capacity where there are spare school places in other maintained schools in the area.

Adult Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state, in relation to his Department's survey of local education authority expenditure on adult education (a) how many authorities were contacted, (b) the names of the authorities, (c) the level of expenditure on further and adult education in each case, with the averages for the sample, (d) the level of expenditure identifiable as relating to adult education, with the average for the sample and (e) the definition of further and adult education employed; and if he will deposit the survey in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: The Department's survey related to all expenditure on further education colleges and adult education centres in the financial year 1989-90. It asked LEAs to divide this expenditure between education of the type set out in schedule 2 to the Further and Higher Education Bill [Lords] and other education. It was addressed to all LEAs in England except those in Inner London, which were not in existence in 1989-90, but were sent a copy of the survey for information. Responses have been received from over 70 LEAs but a consultant has been employed to seek out further responses and to examine the position in Inner London. The consultant's report is expected towards the end of this month and I will deposit a copy in the Library. However, it is not the practice to disclose individual responses to Government surveys.

Business Sponsorship Scheme for Sport

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the business sponsorship scheme for sport.

Mr. Atkins: I am happy to announce today further details of how the business sponsorship scheme for sport is to operate in England. We aim to start the scheme as soon as possible in the coming financial year. Its initial funding in England, where it will be run by the Institute of Sports Sponsorship, will be £3 million.

The scheme will provide a much needed boost to business sponsorship of sport at the grass roots level, ensure that business gets better value for its sponsorship and promote partnership between sport and business at the local level. It will be aimed particularly at the inner cities and at promoting opportunities for young people. Since it is targeted at the grass roots, national events in the sporting calendar will be excluded and it will not cover sponsorship of individuals.

Subject to the discretion of an indpendent panel, the awards will match first time sponsors pound for pound with a minimum of £1,000 and a maximum of £75,000. Existing sponsors seeking to renew their sponsorship of a grass roots event or project will also be eligible for pound for pound matching of any increase in their sponsorship.

It will be open to either the sponsoring company or the sports body to apply for the award of matching finance. Each award will be used by the sports body to enhance the value of the sponsorship and offer the sponsor an even better deal. The award will be paid to the sports body once the sponsor had made his own contribution.

There is no limit to the number of awards a business can receive. The scheme will be open to applicants throughout the year for any eligible sports events or projects, whatever the size of the sports body.

The scheme will be available throughout Great Britain. Details of how it will operate in Scotland and Wales will be announced later.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Hungary

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid the United Kingdom has provided to Hungary to help her deal with refugees from the conflict in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Community has so far contributed some 2 million ECU to the refugee problem in neighbour countries of the former Yugoslavia, mainly via UNHCR and ICRC. UNHCR has itself recently carried out a mission in Hungary and is now preparing a budget for this year's activities. This will enable it to continue helping the Hungarian authorities provide basic assistance and secure conditions in anticipation of early repatriation. We are major contributors in both the EC and UNHCR.

Joint Funding Scheme

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of how the joint funding scheme of the Overseas Development Administration is monitored.

Mrs. Chalker: All agencies receiving funds through the joint funding scheme are required to provide annual audited accounts which separately identify the joint funding scheme grant.

Five agencies to which we provide block grants to finance a number of projects are required to provide a project description for all new projects and, each quarter, to submit a statement of project expenditure showing the duration of the project and the total financial commitment. Each agency provides an annual report on all continuing projects. All other agencies supported under the scheme are required to submit financial reports on their projects at least every six months. Progress reports are required annually and a final report is called for on the completion of each project.

Review visits to selected projects are carried out at least twice a year by advisers and officials. Evaluations of specific projects are carried out by professional advisers on an ad hoc basis.

Overall expenditure is monitored throughout the year to ensure that the scheme's financial targets are met.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a full list of countries in which joint funding scheme projects were implemented, for the most recent year.

Mrs. Chalker: A full list of countries in which the joint funding scheme projects were implemented in the last financial year is as follows:

Afghanistan
Angola

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much Government assistance was provided to voluntary agencies through the joint funding scheme in each year from 1985 to 1990, in cash and real terms.

Mrs. Chalker: The amount of Government assistance provided to voluntary agencies through the joint funding scheme in each year from 1985 to 1990 was as follows:

Cash terms

	£ actual
1985	4,765,068
1986	5,367,279
1987	6,410,954
1988	9,790,591
1989	15,050,146
1990	19,786,309

1989	16,285,327
1990	19,786,309

Malawi

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all United Kingdom overseas aid which directly benefits Malawi in the current year; and if he will provide details of his present plans for 1992-93.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1990 (the latest year for which comprehensive figures are available), British bilateral aid to Malawi comprised the following:

	£ million
Project aid	12·0
Technical co-operation	6·6
Programme aid (balance of payments support)	9·6
Aid and trade provision	0·2
Debt relief	1·7
Investments by the Commonwwealth Development Corporation	7·1
Total gross bilateral aid	37·2

In 1992-93, we shall continue our efforts to reorient the programme away from large-scale infrastructure projects and towards projects in the social sectors of more direct benefit to the most vulnerable social groups. We have meanwhile made clear to the Malawi Government that future levels of programme aid in particular will take account of performance on human rights issues.

Renewable Natural Resources

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation of the renewable natural resources research strategy since April 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) on 19 December 1991 at column 232.

EMPLOYMENT

Work Permits

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those countries where nationals need a work permit to gain employment in Britain.

Mr. Forth: Nationals of all countries, except member states of the European Community and Gibraltar, need a work permit to gain employment in Britain, unless the individual is covered by another provision of the immigration rules.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been issued over the past five years; and if he will list the countries of origin of those to whom permits have been granted.

Mr. Forth: The number of work permits issued over the past five years to 31 December 1991 is 111,478; the countries of origin of those to whom permits have been granted are as follows:

Afghanistan
Albania
Algeria
Andorra
Angola

Industrial Tribunals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether it is his intention to provide more industrial tribunal members and premises to cope with the increased workload following changes to training contracts to permit employers to recover training costs from employees who leave their employment.

Mr. Forth: Industrial tribunal membership and premises are always kept under review in the light of the tribunals' work load.

Training Costs

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether it is his intention that employees who leave their employment prematurely because they feel they (a) are not being given enough responsibility or (b) are being denied promotion unfairly will have to pay their employer a proportion of their training costs;

(2) whether it is his intention that employees who leave their employment prematurely because (a) their new job is closer to home or (b) the hours in the new job are more convenient will have to pay the first employer a proportion of their training costs;

(3) whether it is his intention that employees who leave their employment prematurely because they dislike the boss will have to pay a proportion of their training costs;

(4) whether it is his intention that employees who leave their employment prematurely because (a) of sexual harassment, (b) they are being treated unfairly by a supervisor or (c) they are being denied equal pay for work of equal value in the first job will have to pay their employer a proportion of their training costs;

(5) whether it is his intention that employees who leave their employment prematurely because (a) they prefer a workplace that is organised by a trade union or (b) they realise they will never find the particular job congenial will have to pay their employer a proportion of their training costs.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's White Paper, "People Jobs and Opportunity" (cm. 1810) invited views on how the law relating to the enforceability of training contracts might be clarified, and the procedure for enforcing such contracts simplified. Such contracts between employer and employee are voluntarily entered into, and their terms a matter for the parties not for Government. We are not proposing to alter that position. The Government will take a decision on how to proceed on clarifying the law relating to their enforceability only when it has had the chance to consider the results of its consultation.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements he proposes to make to ensure that the public sector compensates the NHS for the employment of staff trained by the NHS.

Mr. Jackson: None. The White Paper "People, Jobs and Opportunity" invites comments on how to clarify the law on the enforceability of training contracts. The terms of any such contracts are a matter for negotiation between individual employers and their employees.

Foreign Nationals

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many foreign nationals are in full-time employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The available estimates from the Labour Force Survey show that in the spring of 1990 there were 768,000 foreign nationals in full-time employment in the United Kingdom.

Employment Training

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations he has received requesting the age limit to be raised in employment training programmes.

Mr. Jackson: We receive representations from time to time about the age limit in ET. The requirement that trainees enter training before their 60th birthday reflects our concern to ensure that participants are returning to the labour market for the longer, rather than the shorter term, and will justify the public expenditure incurred on their behalf.

HEALTH

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors' surgeries, (b) hospitals and (c) clinics he has visited in the last 12 months.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Ministers and I regularly visit doctors' surgeries, hospitals and clinics in the course of our official duties.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the revenue expenditure of each regional health authority on health service facilities for patients with a mental handicap for each year since 1981, in cash terms and at 1991 prices.

Mr. Dorrell: Prior to the adoption of the recommendations of the Sixth report of the Steering Group on Health Service Information (the Korner Committee) in 1987-88, the information collected for England was incomplete and unrepresentative of the total expenditure provision for people with a learning disability (ie mental handicap). Information derived from Korner annual financial returns for the years since 1987-88 is shown in the table. Those financial returns provide a more complete indication of total expenditure but exclude general services costs and do not capture all relevant direct costs incurred within community health services.

Source: Annual financial returns of district health authorities in England.

Notes:

1. The figures for 1987-88 (the inaugural year for the Korner returns) need to be interpreted with caution and those for 1990-91 are provisional at this stage. The figures for prior years have been expressed at 1990-91 prices by the use of GDP deflators.
2. The figures relate to hospital services revenue expenditure on the mental handicap specialty and to the cost of nursing services provided for persons with a learning disability within community health services (CHS). The hospital figures cover direct clinical and diagnostic costs only (i.e. they exclude expenditure on support and hotel services etc.). Additional pay and non-pay costs incurred within CHS which are not separately identifiable are similarly excluded.

Cholesterol Testing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for health what conclusions he has reached on the need for cholesterol testing of high risk patients; what requirements he makes for statistics to be kept on such tests either by hospitals or general practitioners; and what pilot screening programmes on patients at high risk of coronary heart disease are under way.

Mr. Dorrell: The Standing Medical Advisory Committee has reported on the cost-effectiveness of opportunistic cholesterol testing. The committee's report, issued for consultation, attracted a large number of wide-ranging responses. We have received further comment about this and related issues concerning the prevention of coronary heart disease as part of the consultation on the Green Paper "The Health of the Nation" (Cm. 1523), on which we hope to respond with a Government statement in the spring. No data are held or stipulated centrally concerning such testing or on any pilot screening programmes of patients at high risk of coronary heart disease.

Population Statistics

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current estimated number of 16 to 24-year-old males in Staffordshire and the west midlands.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates of the number of males aged between 16 and 24 years inclusive at mid-1990 are given in the table:

	Thousands
Staffordshire	69·0
West Midlands county	182·5
West Midlands standard region	358·6

GPs (Night Visits)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by family health services authority the amount paid to the general practice with the highest claim for night visit payments in the most recent available period.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Foreign Nationals (NHS Treatment)

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many foreign nationals have received free treatment under the national health service over the past three years; and what has been the cost to the NHS of this provision.

Mrs Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Anyone not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom has to pay for NHS hospital treatment unless he or she is covered by one of a number of specific exemptions.

Traffic Accidents (Hospital Treatments)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by his Department to hospitals with regard to charging patients for treatment following road traffic accidents.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department issued full guidance to health authorities in 1980 in a Health Notice (HN(80)7), a copy of which is available in the Library, about the basis for recovery charges under the the Road Traffic Act. This is still extant. Health authorities are notified periodically of increases in the charges.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount charged by each health authority for treatment given to patients following road traffic accidents for each of the last 10 years; and if he will give the comparable figures for NHS trusts.

Mr. Dorrell: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available as soon as possible.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action will be taken following the failure of European Standing Committee B to support the Government's policy on a ban on tobacco advertising.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government will put a motion to the House shortly.

Cervical Cancer

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for (a) each regional health authority and (b) each district health authority the number of women who died of cervical cancer for the most recent year available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 10 February 1992]: The information requested is shown in the table.

The total number of deaths from cervical cancer in England and Wales in 1990 was 1,781. This represents a decrease in mortality of around 13 per cent. since 1980, when the total number of deaths was 2,068.

Dental and Sight Checks

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has for the cost in 1992-93 of abolishing charges for dental check-ups and sight tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 11 February 1992]: £65 million is a provisional estimate of the full cost in 1992-93 of abolishing dental examination charges. No corresponding estimate exists for sight tests; there are no charges for NHS sight tests, which are available to approximately 40 per cent. of the population.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Foreign Nationals (Benefits)

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many foreign nationals and their dependants are in receipt of social security benefits; and what is the cost to the public purse.

Mr. Jack: Nationality is not one of the determining factors in deciding upon entitlement to social security benefits. Consequently the information requested is not available.

Social Fund Inspectors

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 31 January;

(2) how many social fund inspectors were employed on 31 January.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the Social Fund Commisioner that on 31 January 1992, there were 69 social fund inspectors employed and 3,246 review applications outstanding for more than one month.

Correspondence

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect to receive a reply to his letter of 23 December 1991, to the Minister of State, concerning a constituent's referral to a regional medical officer for examination.

Mr. Scott: I replied to the hon. Member on 27 January 1992 and will arrange for a copy of that reply to be sent to the hon. Gentleman today.

Select Committee Report

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish his response to the Social Security Committee's First Report of this session, HC 18, on public expenditure.

Mr. Newton: Yesterday we laid as Cm 1822, "Public Expenditure: Response by the Government to the First report from the Select Committee on Social Security Session 1991-92."

Care Expenditure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate for likely expenditure on income support payments towards the cost of private or voluntary nursing or residential care during the current financial year.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1992]: The latest estimate for the 1991-92 financial year is £1,950 million.

PRIME MINISTER

GATT Negotiations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the proposals made by the Vice-President of the United States of America on 9 February to link the outcome of the negotiations on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and European security commitments by the United States of America.

The Prime Minister: Vice President Quayle has confirmed publicly that he sees no link between GATT and the United States commitment to European security. Vice President Quayle and I agreed that the success of the Uruguay round was of vital importance to the world economy and that the European Community and the United States must work urgently for a successful agreement.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he discussed the implementation of safeguards arrangements arising from South Africa's membership of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty during the recent visit of President de Klerk to the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: No. South Africa has signed an exemplary safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency and preliminary IAEA inspections are already taking place.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Motor Vehicle Crime

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences of (a) taking a vehicle without the owner's consent and (b) theft of a motor vehicle were reported to the police for the years 1980 to 1991.

Mr. John Patten: Notifiable offences of theft of a motor vehicle include taking a vehicle without the owner's consent. Figures for 1980-89 are published in table 2.12 of "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, 1989" and figures for 1990 are published in Home Office statistical bulletin 13/91; copies of both publications are available in the Library. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his proposals to reduce the incidence of car crimes.

Mr. John Patten: The Government are proposing a six-point action plan to tackle car crime.

First, the prevention of car crime will be the central feature of our crime prevention campaign in 1992, which we have designated 'Car Crime Prevention Year'. The campaign, which was launched by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 11 February, seeks to engage the whole community in a co-ordinated effort to tackle car crime. It comprises a broad programme of national and regional activities and is supported by an extensive Home Office funded advertising and promotional campaign that aims to increase public awareness of the cost of crime, the importance of individual and community action in combating this crime and the steps that should be taken to reduce vehicle risk.

Secondly, the motor vehicle manufacturers have a most important role to play in reducing the opportunities for car crime. My right hon. Friend and I met the manufacturers three times last year to stress the importance of improved vehicle security. The progress being made is encouraging, but much more could be done. In particular, we have stressed the need for the general introduction of effective and safe vehicle immobilisation systems, dead locks, and visible vehicle identification numbers. We are to meet again with the manufacturers next month for a report on progress.

Thirdly, it is also important that motorists should be encouraged to take vehicle security seriously, and rewarded when they do so—not just being penalised when they do not. My right hon. Friend has therefore asked the Association of British Insurers to consider further providing incentives, including reduced premiums, for owners who improve the security of their cars, and take care of them.

Fourthly, we are active on the European front. Trevi, the body which represents EC Ministers responsible for policing, has accepted our suggestion that car theft should be added to its agenda. Experts from across the Community are to meet in London on 25 February to discuss cross-border aspects of car crime. We are also pressing for the British Standard on vehicle security to be adopted as a compulsory EC directive.

Fifthly, the Government have already taken swift action to tackle the criminals who take cars. The Aggravated Vehicle-Taking Bill, which is being considered by the House of Lords, shows our determination to deal with the menace of those who take cars and cause damage, injury or death.

Finally, the police have the Government's full support in their fight against car crime. Provision has been agreed for up to a further 1,000 police posts in 1992-93. The police cannot, however, be expected to take on the task of detecting criminals, maintaining order and protecting the public on their own. They need the full support of the whole community.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has received from chief officers of police for an extension of the vehicle watch scheme as pioneered in Newport, Gwent, to other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: There are now more than 20 vehicle watch schemes in operation in England and Wales. Some cover whole force areas, while others are limited to police divisions or sub-divisions.

The chief officers of the Welsh forces agreed last year to extend the Gwent scheme, which had been operating for one year, to cover the whole of Wales; this was launched on 11 September 1991.

My right hon. Friend has received no representations about the further extension of vehicle watch. That is a matter for chief officers to decide. Arrangements are, however, in train for vehicle watch to be evaluated during this year, with a view to it being encouraged throughout England, if it is shown to be succesful in reducing vehicle theft.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were received into Brixton prison in the last week for which figures are available; and for what offences they were remanded.

Mrs. Rumbold: The readily available information, which is given in the table, is based on the three weeks commencing 1 December 1991.

Crime

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of notifiable crimes committed in 1991; and what were the comparable figures for 1978.

Mr. John Patten: Notifiable offence statistics for 1978 are published in table 2.2 of "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, 1989". Figures for 1990 are published in Home Office statistical bulletin 13/91; copies of both publications are available in the Library. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the figures for the percentage change in reported crime between 1979 and 1991 in (a) Neath, (b) south Wales and (c) the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: The available information shows that between 1979 and 1990 recorded crime increased by 94 per cent. in south Wales and 79 per cent. in England and Wales as a whole. Statistics are not collected centrally for Neath.

The British crime survey provides a measure of reported crime as experienced by adults in England and Wales. The most recent available results show that there was a 30 per cent. increase in offences measured by the survey between 1981 and 1987, as against a 41 per cent. increase in comparable recorded offences. Estimates are not available for the change in Neath or south Wales.

Figures for Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State of Scotland, and figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of each police force in England as to what proportion of the clear-up rate for crime in his area in 1990-91 is accounted for by voluntary admissions by convicted criminals; how many detectives are employed to obtain these admissions; and when the practice ceased.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information for police forces in England on the number of offences cleared up by an interview of convicted offenders in custody is contained in the table below. Further information is not readily available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the clear-up rates for every police force in England and Wales during the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available figures, for 1990, are published in Home Office statistical bulletin 4/91, which is available in the Library. They are annotated as provisional in the bulletin, but only south Wales's figure has since been revised, to 36 per cent. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

HM Chief Inspector of Prisons

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend the powers of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons so that he can inspect police and court cells holding prisoners.

Mrs. Rumbold: I do not believe that it would be right to seek to extend the functions of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons to include inspections of police and court cells. I am satisfied with the existing arrangements under which Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, in the course of his inspections of individual police forces, will take account of the standard of accommodation provided for prisoners and the general conditions in which they are held.

Young Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-year-olds remanded into prison in each year since 1981 were subsequently found not guilty.

Mrs. Rumbold: The readily available information is given in the table. Data for 1991 are not yet available.

[1] Charge withdrawn or dismissed, no evidence offered on prisoner acquitted or not tried. Separate figures are not available. The data are under recorded to some extent.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-year-old prisoners were put into strip conditions either as suicide prevention or as a punishment in 1990 and in 1991; and in which prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: An inmate who is violent or refractory may be termporarily confined in a special cell or an unfurnished cell if this is necessary to prevent him from injuring himself or others, damaging property or creating a serious disturbance. No inmates may be placed in such accommodation as a punishment.

In 1990, six prisoners aged 15 were confined in special cells; none was for the prevention of suicide. Information on the use of unfurnished cells was not collected centrally. Data for 1991 are not yet available.

An inmate may be deprived of his clothing only if this essential to prevent him from injuring himself of others. In such cases, the inmate must be provided with a suit of protective clothing so that he can be decently dressed. No information on prisoners deprived of their clothing in this way is collected centrally.

Feltham Young Offenders Institution

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been received into Feltham young offenders institution in the last week for which figures are available; and for what offences they were remanded or convicted.

Mrs. Rumbold: The readily available information, which is given in the table, is based on the three weeks commencing 1 December 1991.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new project licences assessed as being of substantial severity were issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 in each year since the Act came into force.

Mrs. Rumbold: Project licences assessed as being of substantial severity account for a very small proportion of all project licences issued. More detailed information is contained in the annual reports of the animal procedures committee, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new project licences authorising scientific procedures on primates were issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 in each year since the Act came into force.

Mrs. Rumbold: Non-human primates receive special protection under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 and may be used only where no other suitable species is available. Records held centrally on project licences issued do not identify those which authorise the use of non-human primates. Non-human primates accounted for 0·2 per cent. of animals used in scientific procedures started in 1990.

Credit Reference Agencies

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the relevant statutory provisions relating to the circumstances in which credit reference agencies may be used; and what uses are regarded by his Department as acceptable or worthy of encouragement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The relevant provisions are sections 157 to 160 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and various provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984. The Government consider that the use of credit reference agencies for inquiring into creditworthiness and ability to repay, and thus to promote responsible lending, is to be encouraged.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what safeguards are available to protect individuals (a) in regard to information held about them by credit reference agencies and (b) the way in which any such information is released by such agencies to third parties.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sections 158 and 159 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 give right of access and correction and various provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 give rights to data subjects. Various provisions of the Data Protection Act regulate disclosure; and the expectation of the Office of Fair Trading, which licenses credit reference agencies, is that they will require subscribers not to make information available to third parties.

Poll Tax

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many regulation 41 poll tax committal hearings—means inquiries—have been held; and of these how many resulted in a suspended prison sentence.

Mr. John Patten: During the period 1 April 1990 to 31 December 1991, 11,259 means enquiries were held. No information is available on how many of these resulted in a suspended committal warrant.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is available as to the number of poll tax liability orders granted by magistrates courts against people in receipt of poll tax rebates.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not separately collected.

Sipho Mbete

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will be in a position to take a decision on the application by the UNHCR for asylum in the United Kingdom for Sipho Mbete before 14 February when the Zambian authorities have said that they will repatriate him to South Africa.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that Mr. Mbete has decided to withdraw his application and to return to South Africa. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is assisting in his return and has confirmed that his decision was made voluntarily.

Hillsborough Family Support Group

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be in a position to reply to the letter from the Hillsborough family support group dated 22 October 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter sent to him on 22 October 1991 from the Hillsborough family support group in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A reply was sent to the Hillsborough family support group on 12 February 1992.

Gwent Police

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out his reasons for deciding to increase the establishment of the Gwent police force by one uniformed policeman.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State takes advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary on increases in police establishments generally. A range of factors are taken into account in assessing a force's need for additional officers, such as police to population ratio, the incidence of crime, civilianisation and the effectiveness with which a force is utilising its existing resources. These factors indicated that, for 1992-93, Gwent's need for manpower is not as great as other forces, but my right hon. Friend decided that there was a case for a modest increase in its police establishment.

Tobacco Advertisements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek changes in legislation to require that, when advertisements for tobacco products are seen on television at sporting and other events, a health warning is also given in vision and sound.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. The broadcast coverage of tobacco company sponsored events, or events at which there is advertising for any tobacco company, is subject to a voluntary agreement reached between the Minister for Sport and the Tobacco Advisory Council in 1987.

Receivership

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the rules regarding the level of legal costs which may be granted out of company funds to directors of companies in administration or receivership.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

There are no such rules in the insolvency legislation. The receiver or administrator has discretion over which legal costs he should incur in the interests of carrying out his duties. Company directors in failed companies usually have to meet their own costs if legal action is taken against them.

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the advice issued to liquidators and administrators in relation to finance allowed to directors of companies in administration/liquidation or receivership.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the liquidator's or administrator's professional judgment and is not the subject of advice issued by my Department.

In formal insolvency proceedings, a creditors committee may be established and may require information on those and other matters.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Credit and Home Owners

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the increase in the amount of credit in each year since 1985; and how much of this was provided in the form of mortgages to home-owners for spending for other purposes.

Mr. Maples: Full information is not available in the form requested. However, figures for the increase in the amount of credit supplied each year since 1985 including loans for house purchase are contained in Financial Statistics table 9.3.

North West Pensioners Liaison Forum

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had from the chairman of the North West Pensioners' Liaison Forum; what reply he is sending; if there is any action that he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The chairman of the forum wrote to me last month. My right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary replied on 12 February.

Income Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the lower income tax threshold; and what is the marginal rate of income tax at that threshold, in each of the EC member states.

Mr. Maude: Estimates based on the latest available information are given in the table. Unless otherwise stated the figures relate to 1991.

The threshold is the amount of gross income below which no tax is payable; the mariginal rate is the rate of tax charged on the first unit of taxable income.

Rates and thresholds relate to a single person, and to income from employment only. Standard deductions available to all employees have been taken into account.

Thresholds have been converted from local currencies into £ sterling using the latest available OECD purchasing power parities.

Married Couple's Allowance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many tax payers with gross earnings of £33,000 and above in 1992-93 will be entitled to a married couple's allowance.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that 760,000 tax payers with earnings from employment or self-employment over £33,000 will be entitled to the married couple's allowance in 1992-93 assuming statutory indexation.

Tax Exemption Certificates

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many income tax exemption certificates were in force in each year since 1980 (a) in total and (b) by industrial sector.

Mr. Maude: The numbers of Inland Revenue certificates in force at each year-end for self-employed subcontractors, enabling them to receive payment from contractors without any deduction on accout of tax, are shown in the table. The scheme applies only in the construction industry.

At 31 December	Number

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect of nominal exchange rate changes to date since the first quarter of 1991 on the trade-weighted Department of Trade and Industry and International Monetary Fund indices of relative export unit values for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 February 1992]: Competitiveness depends on a number of factors, in particular the effectiveness of United Kingdom producers in controlling their costs.

Manufacturers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the elasticity of demand for United Kingdom exports and imports of manufactures in terms of price in 1973, 1979, 1986 and currently; and what is the implied effect in each case, in terms of the subsequent growth in the volume of imports and exports, of the increase in the real exchange rate measured in terms of (a) relative export prices and (b) of the terms of trade which has since taken place;

(2) what is his current estimate of the elasticity of demand for United Kingdom imports and exports of manufacturers; and what is his estimate of the likely effect on the volume of imports and exports in each of the years 1993-95 of an increase in the rate of growth in each of those years (a) 1·5 per cent., (b) 2 per cent. and (c) 2·5 per cent. and of the effect on the balance of payments as a percentage of gross domestic product, and on output and employment.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 February 1992]: Precise estimates of the kind requested are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on the numbers employed in manufacturing of the increase in the trade-weighted relative price of United Kingdom exports to imports of finished manufactures between the second half of 1973 and first quarter of 1991; and if he will give figures for the number and the percentage loss of jobs in manufacturing since 1973 in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany and (c) Japan.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 February 1992]: Precise estimates of the effect of such relative price changes on numbers employed in manufacturing are not available. Comparable figures for changes in manufacturing employment in the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan are published in OECD Labour Force Statistics, which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on the numbers employed in manufacturing industry of the change in the trade-weighted relative price of United Kingdom exports of manufactures between the second half of 1973 and the first quarter of 1991; and if he will publish a table showing the change over the same period in the sterling price of exports of manufactures with (i) the United Kingdom ex-factory price of manufactured goods other than food, drink, tobacco, printing and publishing and (ii) the weighted average increase in the retail price of such goods compared to that of other components in the retail prices index.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 13 February 1992]: Reliable estimates of the kind requested in the first part of the question are not available. The figures requested in the second part of the question could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the specific measures taken by his Department to enforce motorists' respect for pedestrian rights at zebra and pelican crossings.

Mr. Chope: Enforcement of the law is a matter for the police. It is the responsibility of individual motorists to comply with the law on pedestrian crossings, which is set out in the highway code. The Department issues publicity to improve drivers' compliance with the crossing regulations.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to complete his review of pedestrian crossing facilities.

Mr. Chope: I intend to make an announcement later this month; I shall write to the hon. Member then.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give annual figures for injuries for the last 10 years for which figures are available, including the number of (a) children and (b) adults who have been hit by cars on or near pedestrian crossings in (i) the Metropolitan police area of London and (ii) England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows:

Traffic Cameras

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 63, how many automatic cameras have been installed at traffic-light-controlled junctions; and how many more are planned this year.

Mr. Chope: Installation of camera sites and deployment of traffic light cameras are primarily matters for highway authorities in conjunction with the police. Complete information is therefore not available centrally, but it is known that by the end of 1991, traffic light cameras were in use at over 100 sites in England and Wales.

M25

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultations his Department had with representatives from local authorities over the decision to widen the M25;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the proposals to widen the M25;

(3) what environmental considerations his Department took into account in the decision to widen the M25;

(4) if he has met representatives of the London Boroughs Association over Government plans to widen the M25.

Mr. Chope: My Department has consulted widely with local authorities about the proposals for the M25 and will continue to do so. Many representations have been received from the public and representative bodies and will be carefully considered. The full range of environmental considerations have been taken into account and environmental assessments will take place for every scheme. The London Boroughs Association has not been a formal consultee but representatives of some of its member authorities have participated in the discussions.

Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which agencies are contributing to the environmental impact assessment into the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road; and when this work commenced.

Mr. Chope: Consulting engineers and their associated landscape sub-consultants are carrying out environmental appraisals as part of the initial investigation of options. Representative environmental bodies have been consulted in confidence. The work began with the appointment of consultants in 1990.

Mr. A. D. Lawrie

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he first received correspondence relating to Mr. A. D. Lawrie of 79 Ninian road, Hemel Hempstead on the subject of the sale of car insurance by telephone; and when he expects to give a definitive answer to the points raised.

Mr. Chope: My Department first received correspondence from Mr. Lawrie on this subject on 19 February 1990. A substantive reply was sent on 20 April 1990. There has been later correspondence and I last wrote to my hon. Friend on the subject last September. I hope to send a further letter on outstanding points before the end of this month.

Roads, Leicester

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those dual carriageway sections of the eastern district distributor road that have been completed in Leicester and not used; the total unused carriageway and the reason it has not been brought fully into use.

Mr. Chope: This is not a matter for my Department. The eastern district distributor is a local road for which Leicestershire county council, as the highway authority, is responsible.

However, I understand that none of the eastern district distributor road has yet been completed, but that 0·4 miles of the contiguous single carriageway A46/A47 link have ben completed but are unused at present.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost to public funds so far of the non-usage of city sections of the eastern district distributor road in Leicester; and what additional cost city ratepayers are to be required to meet in this respect.

Mr. Chope: This is not a matter for my Department. The eastern district distributor road is a local road for which Leicestershire county council, as the highway authority, is responsible.

However, I understand that none of the eastern district distributor road has yet been constructed, but that the total cost of the unused section of the contiguous A46/A47 link to be of the order of £0·5 million of which the Department has provided 50 per cent through transport supplementary grant.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the pollution levels from the eastern district distribution roads that will affect the residents of Victoria Court flats, Oadby.

Mr. Chope: This is not a matter for my Department. The eastern district distributor road is a local road for which Leicestershire county council, as the highway authority, is responsible.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the eastern district distribution road will qualify for transport subsidy grant if it is a single carriageway throughout its length.

Mr. Chope: It is for Leicestershire county council to seek transport supplementary grant for this scheme. It would be assessed, in competition nationally, with schemes from other county councils irrespective of the proposed standard of the road.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will cost the Henwood proposals for the Leicester bypass.

Mr. Chope: The Department's concern is with the strategic trunk road network and, in particular around Leicester, to provide continuity of this network for long-distance traffic by connecting the A46 north and the city with the A6 to the south-west. Various options are being considered within a broad corridor to the east of Leicester. The Henwood proposals go beyond this objective and would provide a southern bypass of the city. We will not, therefore, be costing the Henwood proposals.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spent on funding research and development of air traffic control systems last year; and how much is planned for the next four years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Research and development of such systems is carried out by the Civil Aviation Authority, as the United Kingdom body directly concerned with air traffic control matters. In 1990-91 the authority's budgeted expenditure on air traffic services research and development was £9·7 million, and the budget for 1991-92 is £11·0 million. The budget for future years has not been finalised.

In addition, the United Kingdom contributes to the expenditure of Eurocontrol, of which it is a member, and which has a substantial programme of research and development of air traffic control systems.

School Crossing Patrols

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review his policy of disregarding parked cars in the vicinity as a criterion for deciding priority for school crossing patrols.

Mr. Chope: My Department has not issued advice on criteria for deciding priority for school crossing patrols. This is a matter for local authorities other than in the Metropolitan police district of London where the responsibility falls to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I understand that local authority road safety officers have developed guidance on the establishment of school crossing patrol sites through the national school crossing patrol working party and that this guidance is used widely by local authorities.

Skeffington Bypass

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that the new Skeffington bypass, Leicestershire will be constructed to dual carriageway specification.

Mr. Chope: In common with all other trunk road improvement schemes the appropriate carriageway standard will be determined in accordance with our normal criteria which takes into account a number of factors including cost, value for money, traffic flow and environmental impact.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the Skeffington bypass proposed on the A47, Leicester to cover the whole length of road from the end of the Billesdon bypass to Tugby.

Mr. Chope: The Department has no proposals at present to extend the Skeffington scheme which is planned to route traffic away from the village and improve the alignment of the A47 in that vicinity.

A47, Leicestershire

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have been killed on the A47 between Houghton-on-the-Hill and Tugby in Leicestershire in the past six months.

Mr. Chope: Five. Two were killed on the Billesdon bypass in August 1991, one near Houghton-on-the-Hill in November 1991 and two near Skeffington in January 1992.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that all future improvements on the A47 should be of dual carriageway construction.

Mr. Chope: In common with all other trunk road improvement schemes, the appropriate carriageway standard will be determined in accordance with our normal criteria which takes into account a number of factors including cost, value for money, traffic flow and environmental impact.

Traffic Flow Statistics

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will supply estimated traffic flow figures, in both directions, for the following sections of the Henwood proposals (a) the southern section from the Everards roundabout at the beginning of Soar Valley way to the A6 at Oadby, (b) from the A6 to the A47 and (c) from the A47 to the A46 Newark/Nottingham road.

Mr. Chope: These proposals have not been promoted or examined by my Department and I have no information on traffic flows along their length. We are assessing traffic flows generally in connection with the Leicester eastern bypass scheme. This assessment will take account of the effect of other roads in the area.

Norsea

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why his Department's officials at Hull docks, supervising the trial of new lifeboat equipment on the passenger ferry Norsea on 5 February did not insist that the crewsmen testing the equipment wore life-jackets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The marine accident investigation bureau is investigating the incident referred to. Its report will address the use of life-jackets and it is not appropriate for me to comment any further at this stage except to state that the officials did not take a supervisory role.

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who are the members of his team reviewing the strategic and defence needs for British merchant shipping; when he expects this review to be completed; and if he will place copies of the review when complete in the Library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

The defence need for merchant shipping is kept under regular review as part of normal planning. The ability of British merchant shipping to meet those needs is being considered inter Departmentally and a statement will be made in due course. There will not be a published report.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ambassadorial Limousines

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the original purchase price paid and the eventual disposal price obtained in the last three transactions involving Rolls-Royce motor cars belonging to Her Majesty's embassies sold out of service.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: For commercial reasons the terms of sale between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Rolls-Royce Motor Cars are confidential.

The proceeds of the last three sales of Rolls-Royce cars by missions overseas were:

Date and Mission	Price realised £
12 May 1989 British Embassy, Bonn	37,931·08
20 April 1990 British High Commission, Canberra	67,370·89
27 June 1990 United Kingdom Mission to United Nations, New York	34,292·34

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number, location and all relevant criteria considered in deciding which of Her Majesty's embassies warrant the use of a Rolls-Royce motor car.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Eight Rolls-Royce motor cars have been provided in recent years for the use of our representatives in Bonn, Canberra, Moscow, United Nations (New York), Paris, Pretoria, Tokyo and Washington. The criteria considered includes the importance of these capitals to British interests generally and to Rolls-Royce Motor Cars in particular, operational requirements, initial purchase price, availability of servicing facilities, local conditions, running costs and potential re-sale value.

Gibraltar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning migrant workers in Gibraltar; what representations he has made to the administration of Gibraltar about migrant workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Transport and General Workers Union has recently written to me drawing to my attention the report on the position of Moroccan workers in Gibraltar produced by the Joint Council for the Welfare of Immigrants. We are considering the report with the Gibraltar Government. We have not received any other representations about migrant workers in Gibraltar.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain a copy of the report by the Joint Council for the Welfare of Immigrants, entitled "Between a Rock and a Hard Place," for his departmental library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A copy will be obtained as required.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of Morocco to Her Majesty's Government and to the Gibraltar Administration about the treatment of its nationals in Gibraltar; and what response has been made.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I have not received any such representations from the Government of Morocco, nor so far as I am aware have the Gibraltar Government.

Israel

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom and the European Community arms embargoes on Israel, introduced after the invasion of the Lebanon in 1982, remain in force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our restrictions on the sale of defence equipment to Israel remains in place. There was never a formal EC arms embargo on Israel.

CFE Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made to date in the implementation of the conventional forces in Europe treaty in Hungary, the Cezech and Slovak republics, Poland, Ukraine, Belarus and Russia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 22 states of the North Atlantic Alliance and the Warsaw Pact signed the conventional forces in Europe treaty on 19 November 1990. The United Kingdom ratified the treaty on 19 November 1991. Thirteen other states have also ratified, including the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, the Republic of Hungary and the Republic of Poland.

The treaty will not enter into force until all signatory states have ratified. The main obstacle to entry into force is uncertainty over the application to the armed forces of the former Soviet Union of treaty provisions on equipment holdings.

NATO and other CFE signatories have together established a high level working group to address these problems. The British Government are committed to early entry into force of the CFE treaty, which we regard as a cornerstone of stability in the new Europe.

Pakistan (Nuclear Development)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have made any representations to the Government of Pakistan following Pakistan's announcement that it has the know-how and technology to explode a nuclear warhead.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. We have noted the Pakistani Government's subsequent assurances of their commitment to non-proliferation and have urged them once again to formalise this by accession to the NPT.

Singapore

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will invite the Prime Minister of Japan to attend a commemorative service on the 50th anniversary of the Japanese invasion of Singapore; if he will seek compensation for allied military and civil prisoners of war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no plans to extend such an invitation. Nevertheless, we recognise the poignancy of the anniversary and honour the sacrifice of those who fought and died in south east Asia during the second world war. We shall never forget that great debt, nor the terrible sufferings of so many in Japanese prison camps. We consider, however, that the question of compensation was settled in the 1951 peace treaty.

Soviet Nuclear Exports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the study "Controlling Soviet Nuclear Exports; The New Proliferation Challenge".

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes.

Indonesia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Indonesia's occupation of East Timor was discussed during the recent visit of his Indonesian counterpart to London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: East Timor was discussed during the visit. We welcomed the interest of the United Nations Secretary-General. The Indonesians are well aware that the United Kingdom does not recognise de jure the annexation and occupation of East Timor.

UN Human Rights Commission

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals will be made by Her Majesty's Government to the annual conference of the United Nations Human Rights Commission this month.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In my speech to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights on 30 January, I reaffirmed the British Government's commitment to human rights, and urged the Commission to focus on the issue of holding human rights abusers accountable for their actions. Our delegation to the Commission will also support the extension of the mandates of the Special Rapporteurs and work towards resolutions on several country situations including Burma and Iraq.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cross-Solent Ferry Services

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report into the cross-Solent ferry services.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend published the report on 12 February.

Red Mercury

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what security controls are in place to monitor the international sales of red mercury.

Mr. Redwood: I am advised that the substance known as red mercury has long been incorrectly associated with capabilities in nuclear weapons development. Neither mercury oxide nor mercury sulphide, whether or not in the form which gives them their red colour, are subject to export control from the United Kingdom. If "red mercury" is a code name for enriched uranium, then controls apply.

Indonesia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investment credits have been made available to Indonesia in each year since 1979; and if he will give details in each case.

Mr. Redwood: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to publish the details of the Export Credits Guarantee Departments support for business transacted on individual markets for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

SCOTLAND

Traffic Offences

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many motorists have been (a) charged with and (b) convicted of assault against (i) pedestrians, (ii) cyclists and (iii) other motorists, in each year since 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the existing Scottish work force has vocational qualifications.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 11 February 1992]: Information relating to the qualifications held by those who are of working age, and economically active, is available from the labour force survey. In 1990, the proportion of this group holding one or more qualifications was 72 per cent. It is not possible to distinguish academic and vocational qualifications because only the highest qualification held is recorded.

Health Service Staff

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has given to the trust hospitals concerning the appointment of senior staff, advertising of posts, equal opportunities and salary levels.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 February 1992]: Terms and conditions of trust employees are essentially matters for the trust board but as "NHS Trusts: A Working Guide" makes clear trusts will be required to follow proper procedures as set out in employment legislation; to demonstrate a positive commitment to equal opportunities; and to ensure that there is no unfair discrimination. Trusts are also aware of the need to ensure that salaries are set at levels which properly reflect the responsibilities involved and secure value for money.

WALES

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage change in the value of farming incomes in Wales after taking inflation into account in each year since 1987.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	Current prices £000	Real terms (1986 = 100) £000	Percentage change
1986	46,957	46,957	51·6
1987	55,482	53,297	13·5
1988	73,380	67,167	26·0
1989	61,455	52,178	−22·3
1990	40,045	31,055	−40·5
1991	46,018	33,715	8·6

Crickhowell-Abergavenny Bypass

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the Crickhowell-Abergavenny bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are two separate bypass proposals—the A40 Crickhowell bypass and the A40/A465 Abergavenny western bypass.

Over 700 representations have been received on proposals for Crickhowell. Careful consideration is being given to the views expressed before a decision is made about any bypass for the town.

The preferred route for the Abergavenny western bypass was announced in 1988. Draft orders for the proposed scheme are expected to be published later this year.

Vehicle Watch Scheme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail his reason for rejecting an application for urban aid to support the vehicle watch scheme pioneered in Newport.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The urban programme is a competitive scheme. In the 1992-93 programme, priority was given to strategy-based projects and projects targeted at the most deprived wards in Wales, as identified under the 1991 ward-based index of deprivation. Beyond this, we continue to give the highest priority to major economic and environmental projects and to voluntary sector inspired schemes.

The vehicle watch project was not successful because, in urban programme terms, other projects were regarded as having a higher priority under the above criteria.

I was, however, pleased to support the launch of Vehicle Watch Wales with a grant of £7,000 towards the cost of producing bilingual literature.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Gwent police authority concerning the financing of its vehicle watch scheme; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The clerk of Gwent police authority wrote to the Department on 11 February. The letter is under consideration and a reply will be issued shortly. I was pleased to support the launch of Vehicle Watch Wales with a grant of £7,000 towards the cost of producing bilingual literature.

Tobacco Advertisements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what response he intends to make to the decision of European Standing Committee B on 5 February and the observation of Heartbeat Wales on the desirability of banning tobacco advertisements.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Government continue to believe that the best way to control tobacco advertising is by means of a voluntary agreement. Since 1971, there has been a system of voluntary agreements with the tobacco industry which provides control over the advertising and promotion of cigarettes. A new, tougher voluntary agreement with the tobacco industry has recently come into force and strong new health warnings are now appearing on advertisements.

Data are emerging from those countries which have advertising laws and the Government are studying the figures with interest.

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the implications for the funding of the NHS of the decision by Gwent area health authority not to employ 10 midwives who completed their training this week at the Royal Gwent hospital.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I understand that offers of employment will be made by the authority to those of the group who have qualified and wish to remain in Gwent.

Expenditure on education and training is of course a long-term investment and there is invariably a certain amount of mobility among newly qualified staff. Staffing levels are set in the light of local working practices and changing needs and priorities and employing authorities have never been able to give guarantees that posts will be offered to all nurses and midwives on completion of their training.

It is a measure of the success of the new grading structure for clinical nurses and midwives and the attractiveness of the salaries paid to qualified staff that there has been a general improvement in retention rates throughout Wales, particularly in the more senior grades. In Gwent, the turn-over rate for midwives has reduced very significantly over the past two years and projected vacancies have not materialised. The NHS in Wales has made considerable progress in the area of manpower planning and the Department is working closely with the service—through the manpower resource group—to monitor and strengthen the planning process to ensure that the training and supply of professional staff correlates closely to predicted staffing requirements.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the revenue expenditure of each regional health authority on health service facilities for patients with a mental handicap for each year since 1981, in cash terms and at 1991 prices.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 7 February 1992]: Planning and expenditure on mental handicap services in Wales is done jointly by health and social services authorities in county joint planning teams. The latest total expenditure figures, at outturn prices, are as follows:

Year	£
1987-88	47,779,730
1988-89	57,290,027
1989-90	65,737,589

Welsh Office additional funds are included in these figures and have grown from £9·6 million in 1987-88 to £34·5 million in 1991-92.

Prior to 1987-88, the expenditure data which were collected on hospital and community health services in Wales for patients with a mental handicap were incomplete and therefore unrepresentative of total provision. Spending on these service since 1987-88 has been as follows:

District Health Authority	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £

Notes:

1. The figures presented for 1990-91 are provisional at this stage.
2. The figures relate to hospital services' expenditure and community health services' expenditure, where this can be separately identified. The hospital services' figures relate only to direct clinical and diagnostic services to patients and therefore do not include any attribution of expenditure in respect of general services such as administration, transport, hotel services or estate management. Similarly, the community health services' figures relate only to the nursing element of community services for those with a mental handicap.

Community Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy initiatives he proposes to advance community care in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 13 February 1992]: We continue our programme of wide-ranging measures to imlement the reforms set out in the "Caring for People" White Paper (Cm 849) which will improve community care.

This includes:

Comprehensive guidance on assessment and care management, and centrally financed pilot projects in each county.

Guidance on the preparation of fully joint social care plans, which are being prepared under the leadership of social services authorities working with health, family health service and housing authorities, and in full consultation with user and carer interests. These are to be published by 1 April.

A requirement that social services authorities and their partners should publish readily understandable guides for users and carers setting out arrangements for assessment and care management, standards of services, and for complaints and other representations if services do not live up to those published standards.

A unique central funding scheme to encourage the development of more flexible forms of community care for elderly people and people with physical or sensory disabilities, under which 46 projects are already being supported, with more to follow next year.

Central funding for a training support programme to help prepare front-line staff. Further resources will be available in the coming year.

In introducing these measures, we have built upon the experience gained in Wales from our unique mental handicap and mental illness strategies which continue. My right hon. Friend will announce shortly his proposals for the development of the mental handicap strategy from April 1993.

On top of the record levels of resources we are providing to health and social services authorities for their discretionary use within our policies and programmes, we are providing nearly £43 million of direct grant for community care. We will announce soon additional resources for 1992-93.

Rail Crossings

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications he estimates will be made in Wales in the five years following the coming into operation of the provisions in schedule 2 of the Transport and Works Bill for (a) rail crossing diversion orders in respect of bridleways, (b) rail crossing extinguishment orders in respect of bridleways, (c) rail crossing diversion orders in respect of footpaths and (d) rail crossing extinguishment orders in respect of footpaths.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for railway operators, primarily British Rail, but I understand that no comprehensive forecasts are currently available.

DEFENCE

Procurement Executive

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many senior officials in the Ministry of Defence Procurement Executive have had previous long-term experience of working in the defence industry or any other manufacturing industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: Nineteen.

RAF Raynham

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to transfer the land and/or buildings at RAF Raynham to local authorities, or any other organisation, for housing or community purposes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to do so at present.

RAF Coltishall

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to close RAF Coltishall.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are continuing to examine the scope for further rationalisation in RAF support. Any decisions will be announced as they are made.

Earthmoving Equipment (Iraq)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has received that earthmoving equipment supplied by United Kingdom companies was used by Iraqi forces in military operations during the period 1989 to 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no evidence that earth-moving equipment supplied by the United Kingdom was used for military operations by Iraq.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what types of aircraft will be deployed to Goose bay, Canada, for low flying training in 1992; what are the planned dates of deployment; and how many sorties the RAF expects to fly from Goose bay during 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is planned that nine Tornado GR1 and eight Tornado F3 aircraft will be deployed to Goose bay in 1992. Tornado GR1s will be deployed initially between 2 and 7 April and thereafter from 22 May to 25 September. It is planned that they will carry out some 1,350 low level training sorties. Tornado F3s will be deployed from 26 May to 7 July and will carry out some 350 sorties, each of which will include an element at low level. C130 Hercules aircraft undertaking routine resupply tasks to Goose bay will also carry out a small number of low-level training sorties.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what enhancements of existing facilities have been made since 1989 in order to achieve a more even distribution of low flying throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government's policy of spreading low flying as widely as possible has been pursued through a continuous review of the low-flying system. We expect the distribution of low flying to be further improved in future by a fast-jet turn round facility which is being established at RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low flying in each of the years 1986 to 1990 came from addresses located within Low Flying Area 18.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The numbers of inquiries or complaints about low-flying training which my Department received in each of the years 1986 to 1990 from addresses located within low-flying area 18 are as follows:

Year	Number
1986	374
1987	237
1988	276
1989	264
1990	184

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was his Department's contribution to the economy of Gibraltar, in cash and kind, in the current and previous financial years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We do not make any assessment of this Department's contribution to the economy of Gibraltar. In the current financial year my Department expects to spend approximately £60 million in maintaining our interests in Gibraltar. Figures for previous financial years are not readily available.

Military Equipment Sales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value in pounds sterling of all military equipment sold by the United Kingdom to overseas Governments in 1990 and 1991; and how much was allocated to Third world countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991, volume 2, table 2.7, for the information for 1990. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Guard Service

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to provide the MOD guard service with constabulary powers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to equip the MOD guard service with firearms.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the MOD police complementing criteria will be affected by the introduction of the MOD guard service.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, columns 683-84, in which year he intends to place an order for the design and build of the first of class of a further class of nuclear-powered fleet submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is nothing further I can add to the reply my right hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark) gave the hon. Gentleman on 29 November 1991, Official Report, columns 683-84.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has told the management of VSEL in which year he intends to place an order for the design and build of the first of class of a further class of nuclear-powered fleet submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The company has been provided with the planning information required to conduct the design studies contract without commitment to further orders. No decisions on the order date have yet been taken.

Housing Task Force

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many announcements have been made regarding the work of the housing task force since it was established.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The work of the housing task force has been referred to in the defence debate of 15 October and in response to parliamentary questions. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence hopes to make a further announcement shortly.

Air-to-Air Missile

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to state the date on which he will make a decision about the tender evaluation for the advanced short-range air-to-air missile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 20 January, Official Report, column 32.

Missiles

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many batteries of Rapier field standard C missile systems he intends to bring into service in (a) 1992-93, (b) 1993-94, and (c) 1994-95.

Mr. Alan Clark: We currently plan to deploy by the mid-1990s two batteries of Rapier field standard C with the Army and three squadrons with the RAF.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which year he envisages the European fighter aircraft will complete its development programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The industrial programme for the development of the European fighter aircraft has a completion date of 1999.

C130 Transport Aircraft

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which years he envisages that (a) the development programme and (b) the production programme of the replacement for the current C130 transport aircraft will begin.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is our intention to procure replacement aircraft for the RAF transport fleet around the turn of the century. We have no plans to participate in a development programme for such an aircraft.

MOD Police

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to expand the MOD police.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We expect there to be a small increase in the short term. In the long term the numbers will reflect the size of the defence estate and the ability of the MOD guard service to perform some tasks which do not require police powers or the use of firearms. No final figure for the size of the force can be given at this stage.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to provide the proposed MOD guard service with similar training to the MOD police.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The two-week MOD guard service basic course is designed to provide the necessary skills and knowledge for their security-oriented duties; it is dissimilar from the MOD police recruit course which lasts 13 weeks based on the standard police training given to recruits to Home Department police forces.

Military Training

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his practice to provide information on military assistance or training given to named countries by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of training provided for overseas military personnel are not normally disclosed as they are confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Governments concerned. There are no plans to change this practice.

Regiment Establishments

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the number of serving officers and other ranks in (a) the 2 Battalion, the Queen's Regiment, (b) the King's Own Royal Border Regiment, (c) the 1 Battalion, the Royal Anglian Regiment and (d) the Royal Hampshire Regiment, expressed as a percentage increase or deficit above or below their respective peacetime establishments;

(2) what is the projected number of serving officers and other ranks in the 1 Battalion, the Staffordshire Regiment on 1 May, expressed as a percentage increase or deficit above or below its peacetime establishment;

(3) what was the number of serving officers and other ranks in the 1 Battalion, the Staffordshire Regiment on 11 February, expressed as a percentage increase or deficit above or below its peacetime establishment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Recruitment

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current estimated number of 16 to 24-year-old males in the recruiting areas of (a) the Queen's Regiment, (b) the King's Own Royal Border Regiment, (c) the Royal Anglian Regiment and (d) the Royal Hampshire Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information is not available in the precise form requested, as no regiment recruits exclusively within a particular geographical area. The table shows the total population in the 16 to 24-year-old age group in the following Army districts in 1990:

Population in the 16 to 24-year-old group

Army district	[1]1990
South East	538·5
London	456·5
North West	461·3
Eastern	624·9

[1] Population (thousands).

Departmental Property

Mr. Menzies-Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what heritable property his Department (a) acquired and (b) leased in Scotland in each year since 1986;

(2) if he will list by region the heritable property other than that owned or leased over which his Department has the right to carry out military training in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors determine whether his Department acquires or obtains the lease of land in Scotland for military training purposes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The military requirement for short or long-term use, cost and the commercial preference of the owner.

Military Estate

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether, as part of "Options for Change", a review has been carried out of the military estate in Scotland;

(2) if he will conduct a review of the land presently owned or leased by his Department in Scotland for military training purposes with a view to disposing of any that is surplus to requirements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The size of the defence estate is kept under constant review.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions and on what dates in the last five years for which information is available military training has taken place in Tentsmuir forest.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, when his Department leases land from the Forestry Commission in Scotland, a market value rent is paid.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the terms of the agreement between his Department and the Forestry Commission for the use of Tentsmuir forest for military training purposes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No formal agreement exists. Tentsmuir forest is used on an occasional basis and terms are negotiated for each period of use.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by region the heritable property (a) owned or (b) leased by his Department in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 1 April 1991, the total area, in hectares, of land and foreshore owned or leased by the Ministry of Defence in Scotland by region was:

	Hectares
Highland	5,210
Strathclyde	5,200
Dumfries and Galloway	4,209
Grampian	2,207
Tayside	1,454
Western Isles	1,339
Fife	1,328
Lothian	1,160
Central	80
Shetland Islands	46
Orkney Islands	5
Borders	—

All areas of leased land included in the totals are subject to leases of three years or more; those of shorter duration are regarded as temporary and not recorded centrally. Totals exclude areas over which the Ministry of Defence has occasional training rights.

Local Area Missile System

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Spanish Government gave notice of their intention to withdraw from the local area missile system programme; what are the implications for the future of the programme; and how much has been spent by his Department to date on the programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Spain gave notice of its intention to withdraw on 4 December 1991. The project definition phase of this programme will continue. To date, my Department has spent £700,000.

Soviet Nuclear Brain Drain

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report "Coping with the Soviet Nuclear Brain Drain: An Environmental Approach".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence library has a copy of this report on order.

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES

VOLUME 203

SESSION 1991–92

3rd February—14th February 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
